THE PROSPECT OF PEACE.

THE cloſing ſcenes of Tyrants' fruitleſs rage,
The opening proſpects of a golden age,
The dread events that crown th' important year,
Wake the glad ſong, and claim th' attentive ear.
Long has Columbia rung with dire alarms,
While Freedom call'd her injur'd ſons to arms;
While various fortune fir'd th' embattled field,
Conqueſt delay'd, and victory ſtood conceal'd;
While cloſing legions mark'd their dreadful way,
And Millions trembled for the dubious day.
In this grand conflict heaven's Eternal Sire,
At whoſe dread frown the ſons of guilt expire,
Bade vengeance riſe, with ſacred fury driven,
On thoſe who war with Innocence and Heaven.
Behold, where late the trembling ſquadrons fled,
Hoſts bow'd in chains, and hapleſs numbers bled,
In different fields our numerous heroes rouſe,
To crop the wreath from Britain's impious brows.
Age following age ſhall theſe events relate
'Till Time's old empire yield to deſtin'd Fate;

Hiſtoric

Hiſtoric truth our guardian chiefs proclaim,
Their worth, their actions, and their deathleſs fame;
Admiring crouds their life-touch'd forms behold
In breathing canvaſs, or in ſculptur'd gold,
And hail the Leader of the favorite throng,
The rapt'rous theme of ſome heroic ſong.
And ſoon, emerging from the orient ſkies,
The bliſful morn in glorious pomp ſhall riſe,
Wafting fair Peace from Europe's fated coaſt;
Where wand'ring long, in mazy factions loſt,
From realm to realm, by rage and diſcord driven,
She ſeem'd reſolv'd to reaſcend her heaven.
This Lewis view'd, and reach'd a friendly hand,
Pointing her flight to this far-diſtant land;
Bade her extend her empire o'er the Weſt,
And Europe's balance tremble on her creſt!
Now, ſee the Goddeſs mounting on the day,
To theſe fair climes direct her circling way,
Willing to ſeek, once more, an earthly throne,
To cheer the globe, and emulate the ſun.
With placid look ſhe eyes the bliſsful ſhore,
Bids the loud-thundering cannon ceaſe to roar;
Bids Britiſh navies from theſe ports be toſt,
And hoſtile keels no more inſult the coaſt;
Bids private feuds her ſacred vengeance feel,
And bow ſubmiſſive to the public weal;

Bids

Bids long, calm years adorn the happy clime,
And roll down bleſſings to remoteſt time.
Hail ! heaven-born Peace, fair Nurſe of Virtue
Here, fix thy ſceptre and exalt thy ſcale ; [hail !
Hence, thro' the earth extend thy late domain,
'Till Heaven's own ſplendor ſhall abſorb thy reign !
What ſcenes ariſe ! what glories we behold !
See a broad realm its various charms unfold ;
See crouds of patriots bleſs the happy land,
A godlike ſenate and a warlike band ;
One friendly Genius fires the numerous whole,
From glowing Georgia to the frozen pole.
Along theſe ſhores, amid theſe flowery vales,
The woodland ſhout the joyous ear aſſails ;
Induſtrious crouds in different labors toil,
Thoſe ply the arts, and theſe improve the ſoil.
Here the fond merchant counts his riſing gain,
There ſtrides the ruſtic o'er the furrow'd plain,
Here walks the ſtateſman, penſive and ſerene,
And there the ſchool boys gambol round the green.
See ripening harveſts gild the ſmiling plains,
Kind Nature's bounty and the pride of ſwains ;
Luxuriant vines their curling tendrils ſhoot,
And bow their heads to drop the cluſtering fruit ;
In the gay fields, with rich profuſion ſtrow'd,
The orchard bends beneath its yellow load,

The lofty boughs their annual burden pour,
And juicy harveſts ſwell th' autumnal ſtore.
  Theſe are the bleſſings of impartial Heaven,
To each fond heart in juſt proportion given.
No graſping lord ſhall grind the neighbouring poor,
Starve numerous vaſſals to increaſe his ſtore ;
No cringing ſlave ſhall at his preſence bend,
Shrink at his frown, and at his nod attend ;
Afric's unhappy children, now no more
Shall feel the cruel chains they felt before,
But every State in this juſt mean agree,
To bleſs mankind, and ſet th' oppreſſed free.
Then, rapt in tranſport, each exulting ſlave
Shall taſte that Boon which God and nature gave,
And, fir'd with virtue, join the common cauſe,
Protect our freedom and enjoy our laws.
  At this calm period, ſee, in pleaſing view,
Art vies with Art, and Nature ſmiles anew :
On the long, winding ſtrand that meets the tide,
Unnumber'd cities lift their ſpiry pride ;
Gay, flowery walks ſalute th' inraptur'd eyes,
Tall, beauteous domes in dazzling proſpect riſe ;
There thronging navies ſtretch their wanton ſails,
Tempt the broad main and catch the driving gales ;
There commerce ſwells from each remoteſt ſhore,
And wafts in plenty to the ſmiling ſtore.

To theſe throng'd ſeats the country wide reſorts,
And rolls her treaſures to the op'ning ports ;
While, far remote, gay health and pleaſure flow,
And calm retirement cheers the laboring brow.
No din of arms the peaceful patriot hears,
No parting ſigh the tender matron fears,
No field of fame invites the youth to rove,
Nor virgins know a harſher ſound than love.
Fair Science then her laurel'd beauty rears,
And ſoars with Genius to the radiant ſtars.
Her glimmering dawn from Gothic darkneſs roſe,
And nations ſaw her ſhadowy veil diſcloſe ;
She cheer'd fair Europe with her riſing ſmiles,
Beam'd a bright morning o'er the Britiſh iſles,
Now ſoaring reaches her meridian height,
And bleſt Columbia hails the dazzling light !
Here, rapt in tho't, the philoſophic ſoul
Shall look thro' Nature's parts and graſp the whole.
See Genius kindling at a FRANKLIN'S fame,
See unborn ſages catch th' electric flame,
Bid hovering clouds the threatening blaſt expire,
Curb the fierce ſtream and hold th' impriſon'd fire !
See the pleas'd youth, with anxious ſtudy, rove,
In orbs excentric thro' the realms above,
No more perplex'd, while RITTENHOUSE appears
To grace the muſeum with the rolling ſpheres.

See that young Genius, that inventive ſoul,
Whoſe laws the jarring elements control ;
Who guides the vengeance of mechanic power,
To blaſt the watery world & guard the peaceful ſhore.
And where's the riſing Sage, the unknown name,
That new advent'rer in the liſts of fame,
To find the cauſe, in ſecret nature bound,
The unknown cauſe, and various charms of ſound ?
What ſubtil medium leads the devious way ;
Why different tenſions different ſounds convey ;
Why harſh, rough tones in grating diſcord roll,
Or mingling concert charms th' enraptur'd ſoul.
And tell the cauſe why ſluggiſh vapors riſe,
And wave, exalted, thro' the genial ſkies ;
What ſtrange contrivance nature forms to bear
The ponderous burden thro' the lighter air.
Theſe laſt Diſplays the curious mind engage,
And fire the genius of the riſing age ;
While moral tho'ts the pleas'd attention claim,
Swell the warm ſoul, and wake the virtuous flame ;
While Metaphyſics ſoar a boundleſs height,
And launch with EDWARDS to the realms of light.
See the bleſt Muſes hail their roſeate bowers,
Their manſions blooming with poetic flowers ;
See liſtening Seraphs join the epic throng,
And unborn JOSHUAS riſe in future ſong.

Satire

Satire attends at Virtue's wakening call,
And Pride and Coquetry and Dulneſs fall.
Unnumber'd bards ſhall ſtring the heavenly lyre,
To thoſe bleſt ſtrains which heavenly themes inſpire;
Sing the rich Grace on mortal Man beſtow'd,
The Virgin's Offspring and the filial God;
What love deſcends from heaven when JESUS dies!
What ſhouts attend him riſing thro' the ſkies!
See Science now in lovelier charms appear,
Grac'd with new garlands from the blooming Fair.
See laurel'd nymphs in poliſh'd pages ſhine,
And Sapphic ſweetneſs glow in every line.
No more the rougher Muſe ſhall dare diſgrace
The radiant charms that deck the bluſhing face;
But riſing Beauties ſcorn the tinſel ſhow,
The powder'd coxcomb and the flaunting beau;
While humble Merit, void of flattering wiles,
Claims the ſoft glance, and wakes th' enlivening ſmiles.
The opening luſtre of an angel-mind,
Beauty's bright charms with ſenſe ſuperior join'd,
Bid Virtue ſhine, bid Truth and Goodneſs riſe,
Melt from the voice, and ſparkle from the eyes;
While the pleas'd Muſe the gentle boſom warms,
The firſt in genius, as the firſt in charms.
Thus age and youth a ſmiling aſpect wear,
Aw'd into virtue by the leading Fair;

While the bright offspring, riſing to the ſtage,
Conveys the bleſſings to the future age.
THESE are the views that Freedom's cauſe attend;
THESE ſhall endure 'till Time and Nature end.
With Science crown'd, ſhall Peace and Virtue ſhine,
And bleſt Religion beam a light divine.
Here the pure Church, deſcending from her God,
Shall fix on earth her long and laſt abode;
Zion ariſe, in radiant ſplendors dreſs'd,
By Saints admir'd, by Infidels confeſs'd;
Her opening courts, in dazzling glory, blaze,
Her walls ſalvation, and her portals praiſe.
From each far corner of th' extended earth,
Her gathering ſons ſhall claim their promis'd birth.
Thro' the drear waſtes, beneath the ſetting day,
Where prowling natives haunt the wood for prey,
The ſwarthy Millions lift their wondring eyes,
And ſmile to ſee the Goſpel morning riſe:
Thoſe who, thro' time, in ſavage darkneſs lay,
Wake to new light, and hail the glorious day!
In thoſe dark regions, thoſe uncultur'd wilds,
Freſh blooms the roſe, the peaceful lilly ſmiles.
On the tall cliffs unnumber'd Carmels riſe,
And in each vale ſome beauteous Sharon lies.
From this fair Mount th' excinded ſtone ſhall roll,
Reach the far Eaſt and ſpread from pole to pole;

From

From one ſmall Stock ſhall countleſs nations riſe,
The world repleniſh and adorn the ſkies. [Sun,
Earth's blood-ſtain'd empires, with their Guide the
From orient climes their gradual progreſs run ;
And circling far, reach every weſtern ſhore,
'Till earth-born empires riſe and fall no more.
But ſee th' imperial GUIDE from heaven deſcend,
Whoſe beams are Peace, whoſe kingdom knows no
From calm Veſperia, thro' th' etherial way, [end ;
Back ſweep the ſhades before th' effulgent day ;
Thro' the broad Eaſt, the brightening ſplendor
Reverſes Nature and illumins heaven ; [driven,
Aſtoniſh'd regions bleſs the gladdening ſight,
And Suns and Syſtems own ſuperior light.

As when th' aſterial blaze o'er Bethl'em ſtood,
Which mark'd the birth-place of th' incarnate God ;
When eaſtern prieſts the heavenly ſplendor view'd,
And numerous crouds the wonderous ſign purſu'd :
So caſtern kings ſhall view th' unclouded day
Riſe in the Weſt and ſtreak its golden way :
That ſignal ſpoke a Savior's humble birth,
This ſpeaks his long and glorious reign on earth !

THEN Love ſhall rule, and Innocence adore,
Diſcord ſhall ceaſe, and Tyrants be no more ;
'Till yon bright orb, and thoſe celeſtial ſpheres,
In radiant circles, mark a thouſand years ;

'Till

'Till the grand fiat burſt th' etherial frames,
Worlds cruſh on worlds, and Nature ſink in flames!
The Church elect, from ſmouldering ruins, riſe,
And ſail triumphant thro' the yielding ſkies,
Hail'd by the Bridegroom! to the Father given,
The Joy of Angels, and the Queen of Heaven!

ON THE LATE HONORABLE

TITUS HOSMER, Esq;

ONE OF THE
COUNSELLORS OF THE STATE OF CONNECTICUT,

A MEMBER OF CONGRESS,

And a JUDGE of the MARITIME COURT OF APPEALS for the UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

TO

Mrs. LYDIA HOSMER,

Relict of the late Honorable

TITUS HOSMER, Esq;

THIS

IS INSCRIBED,

AS a Teſtimony of the Author's Veneration for the many amiable Virtues which rendered her the Delight and Ornament of ſo worthy a Conſort, and ſtill render her an Honor to a very numerous and reſpectable Acquaintance.

AN

ELEGY, &c.

COME to my ſoul, O ſhade of Hoſmer, come,
Tho' doubting ſenates aſk thy aid in vain;
Attend the drooping virtues round thy tomb,
And hear a while the orphan'd Muſe complain.

The Muſe which thy indulgence bade aſpire,
And dare purſue thy diſtant ſteps to fame;
At thy command ſhe firſt aſſum'd the lyre,
And hop'd a future laurel from thy name.

How did thy ſmiles awake her infant ſong!
How did thy virtues animate the lay!
Still ſhall thy fate the dying ſtrain prolong,
And bear her voice with thy loſt form away.

Come

Come to my ſoul thou venerable Sage,
In all the ſheeted majeſty of night,
Snatch the bold quill, control the noble rage,
And ſeize the raptur'd fancy in her flight.

Come in the form that ſhadowy ſpirits dreſs,
When death's dim vail hath ſhrouded all their pride,
While yon tall cloud but emulates thy face,
Where the lone moonbeam trembles thro' its ſide.

Come on the gale that liſtening midnight heaves,
When glare ey'd phantoms, bending with a bier,
Stalk thro' the miſt, aſcend the ſounding graves,
And wake wild wonders in the ſtartled ear.

In this dread ſcene no more the wonted fires
Kindle my breaſt or ope a wiſh within,
The ſoul, diſtracted from herſelf retires,
And ſighs to mingle and to ſoar with thine.

And where, thou bleſt immortal art thou flown?
Can theſe deep ſhades detain thy willing ear?
Canſt thou from loaded breezes hear a groan?
Or ſtain thy ſpotleſs mantle with a tear?

Can ought on earth thy flight hath left behind,
Borne in the muſic of a once lov'd ſtrain,
Approach th' unbodied manſion of the mind?
Or bend one pitying look to earth again?

Can

Can thence no thought to that fair ſeat deſcend ?
The ſeat once joyous in thy joys below,
Where robes of ſable ſadneſs now depend,
And all the ſtill ſolemnities of woe.

Can the dear partner of thy tender years,
Sad as the miſty fading face of even,
With all the waſted treaſure of her tears,
Avert no ſmile nor bribe a care from heaven ?

While that young throng, that dear deſerted train,
Where thy lov'd image ſoften'd ſweetneſs wears,
Swell with new tenderneſs each following pain,
And add unnumber'd, undivided cares.

Around the fair one ſee their beauties bloom,
(Or wilt thou not the moving fair one heed ?)
How their keen anguiſh points the diſtant tomb,
Where all their joys and every hope is fled !

So lonely Cynthia, on her evening throne,
And all her young-ey'd planetary train,
In languid luſtre ſeek their fire the ſun,
Down the ſtill chambers of the weſtern main.

Yet that broad ſplendor from his nightly race,
With riſing radiance ſhall the day reſtore ;
Another ſpring renews fair nature's face,
And years and ages die to waken more.

But

But thou alas! no more on earth wilt tread,
Nor one ſhort hour thy bleſt employments leave,
Tho' the ſad knell, that hail'd thee to the dead,
Had doom'd thy helpleſs country to her grave.

Thy country, whoſe ſtill ſupplicating moan,
Implores thy counſels with an infant cry;
And loads the ſame ſtern Angel with a groan,
Which bore thy kindling ſpirit to the ſky.

Wilt thou (ſince nothing here could bribe thy ſtay,
And nothing here can tempt thee from on high,
Since tears of innocence muſt idly ſtray,
And grateful millions breathe the fruitleſs ſigh;

Since every tender tie that mortals prize,
And all that fame's immortal children gain,
Yield to th' untimely mandate of the ſkies,
And aſk thy kind continuance ſtill in vain;)

Wilt thou in ſeats of bleſſedneſs above,
Where cares of empire claim th' eternal ear,
Among thy country's guardian ſeraphs prove
The hand to cheriſh and the heart to hear?

There while the dread ſublimity of ſoul
O'er all the ſtar-eye'd heaven exalts thy throne,
While worlds beneath immeaſurably roll,
And ſhew the well-known circuit of thine own,

Wilt thou remark the bluely-bending ſhore?
Where hills and champaigns ſtretch abroad their pride,
Where opening ſtreams their lengthieſt currents pour,
And heaps of heroes ſwell the crimſon tide.

Wilt thou recognize that confus'd uproar?
Towns curl'd in ſmoaky columns mounting high,
Mix'd with the clarion's deſolating roar;
Rending and purpling all the nether ſky.

Amid the tumult, wilt thou ſee afar
Our laurel'd heroes ſtriving for the day?
While clouds, unfolding, ope the wings of war,
Where the grim legions ſweep the foes away.

And while their deeds thy bleſt approvance claim,
While crouds of rival chiefs thy guidance ſhare,
Behold that firſt, that finiſh'd heir of fame,
And be the beſt of heroes ſtill thy care.

That hero whoſe illuminating ſword
Lights death and victory through the darken'd field,
Bids realms and ages waken at his word,
Their ſire, their ſoul, their ſavior and their ſhield.

Behold that Senate, whoſe delighted ear
With thy bold eloquence hath often rung,
Where trembling realms, for many a doubtful year,
Have learnt their ſure ſalvation from thy tongue.

While cares of empires ſit upon their brow,
And all th' increaſing counſels of an age,
Demand, alike, bold virtue's warmeſt glow,
And the wide walks of ſcience in the ſage;

Let thy own wiſdom's ever beaming light
Illume their well-known dignity of ſoul,
Let thy benevolence their hearts unite,
And every voice, and every wiſh control.

Lift the deep curtain from the vale of time,
Where unborn years their future circles wind,
Where the broad intereſts of a growing clime
Spread to all realms and regulate mankind.

Unfold to their keen penetrating view,
What to the infant empire ſhould be known,
That worlds' and ages' happineſs or woe,
Hang on th' important iſſue of their own.

And ſure thou wilt that honor'd realm revere,
Where firſt thine early ſteps began their fame,
Where thy lov'd memory, ever doubly dear,
Awakes a tenderer tribute to thy name.

Canſt thou forget, when youthful years began,
Where opening ſcience kindled every grace,
And ſmil'd to ſee, aſcending in the man,
The friend the pride the glory of his race?

Where civil rights, the dignity of men,
And all the extenſive privilege of laws,
Roll'd from thy voice or brighten'd from thy pen,
Compel'd attention and ſecur'd applauſe.

Where riſing worth thine early name enroll'd
Among the firſt fam'd fathers of the age,
And bade the untarniſh'd characters of gold
Flame in the front of glory's deathleſs page.

Attentive ſtill to virtue's noble aim,
And greatly ſtren'ous to advance her cauſe,
Lead thou her counſels animate her flame,
Sire of her ſons, and guardian of her laws.

And ſee! aloft in that ſublime retreat,
Where injur'd rights obtain their laſt appeal,
How penſive juſtice o'er thy vacant ſeat,
With faltering hand ſuſpends her turning ſcale.

If chance ſome Hoſmer, with an even eye,
And ſkill'd like thee to poize the trembling weight,
Should chear the nymph, thine honor'd place ſupply,
And bleſs the nations with a longer date;

When from all bounds of this extenſive land,
Or where wide oceans ſpread their coaſts abroad,
Dark cauſes riſe, demanding from his hand,
Th' impartial deep diſcernment of a god;

Then

Then in his breaſt may all thy virtues riſe,
And all thy dignity around him ſhine,
Then drop thy own bleſt mantle from the ſkies,
And make the perſon as the place divine.

He will, my friends—— th' unbodied life above,
With every virtue brighten'd and refin'd,
That glow'd below, with patriotic love,
The love of happineſs and human kind,

Will burn ſerener in a purer ſky,
Where broader views and bolder thoughts unroll,
Where univerſal Being fills the eye,
And ſwells the unbounded wiſhes of the ſoul.

No tender thought by heaven's own breath inſpir'd,
Which taught the gentle boſom here to glow,
Which the warm breaſt with patriot ardor fir'd,
Or ſtole the ſecret tear for ſilent woe,

No tender thought by heaven's own will approv'd,
Can e'er forſake the manſion firſt aſſign'd;
But reaches ſtill the object once belov'd,
And lives immortal in th' immortal mind.

Fix'd in a brighter ſphere, with ſurer aim,
Tho' greater ſcenes his growing views employ,
Yet Hoſmer kindles with an Hoſmer's flame,
And his dear country feeds his nobleſt joy.

He

He ſees our riſing, all-involving cauſe,
Spread like the morn to every diſtant clime,
Awake the mild magnificence of laws,
And roll down bleſſings on the ſtream of time.

Nor think, O hapleſs fair one, tho' awhile,
From thy fond arms his happier ſpirit rove,
That ſoaring innocence can ceaſe to ſmile,
Or his Seraphic boſom ceaſe to love.

In Heaven's own breaſt the ſelf-exiſtent fires,
E'er time began, illum'd th' eternal flame,
Lit from the beam, the Archangellic quires
Preſerve th' unchanging ardor ſtill the ſame.

And ſhall the heaven-born ſpirit after death,
Robb'd of its virtues from its nature fly?
Or loſe in climes of bliſs the aſpiring breath,
Which wing'd its paſſage to its kindred ſky?

Think, in the chambers of eternal morn,
Where beauty blooms along the vernal vale,
Where loves and virtues every ſmile adorn,
And hymns of Angels ſwell the floating gale;

Think how his well-known ſympathy of ſoul
Views every pain thy tenderneſs can know;
Counts the full tears in ſilence as they roll,
And learns the tale of every ſpeaking woe.

Thou

Thou knowſt, while here, he joy'd to give relief,
To call dark merit to the eye of day,
To rob the ſilent orphan of her grief,
And breathe the ſigh from innocence away.

How did the trembling viſage of the poor,
With grateful glow embolden at his ſmile!
And learn, well pleas'd, within his wonted door,
Its joys to cheriſh, and its cares beguile.

Thou knowſt his early wiſh began to prize
The bliſs that wayward mortals ſeldom find,
That lifts the frequent ſuppliant to the ſkies,
While anſwering bleſſings fill the raptur'd mind.

Know then, fair mourner, from the climes of day,
(While theſe drear ſhades of ſolitude you tread)
His unſeen hand companion of thy way,
Thro' the dark paths thy wandering ſteps ſhall lead.

While all thy virtues riſe before the throne,
And all thy griefs be number'd in his ſight,
Thoſe ſhall refine and ripen with his own,
And theſe be huſh'd in everlaſting night.

Thy children too, his images below,
Fair as young plants, and ſmiling as the morn,
With thy own lovelineſs ſhall learn to glow,
And all thy graces brighten and adorn.

Short

Short is the date that virtue from its home,
In theſe deep ſhades, can ſuffer and refine ;
And when kind heaven relieves it from the doom,
Ours be the choice to tremble and reſign.

Vain were the taſk, the daring thought were vain,
To check the ſun's bold circuit as he flies ;
Nor think the cling of fondneſs can detain
The ſoaring ſeraph from his kindred ſkies.

Then ceaſe, fond partner of his earthly joys,
And leave behind each unavailing care ;
Think what a ſcene his happier flight employs,
And haſte to meet him and to mingle there.

PUBLIC COMMENCEMENT

IT may not be amiſs to inform the ſubſcribers for the following performance, that a copy was not given at the time it was requeſted, on account of its containing ſeveral paſſages taken from a larger work which the author has by him, unfiniſhed. Upon farther conſideration however, it is thought not improper to preſent to the Public a ſpecimen of that work, in this incorrect manner, that a conjecture may be formed what ſucceſs it may meet, when the whole ſhall make its appearance. The paſſages are thoſe that reſpect the affairs of America at large, and the future progreſs of Society. As to the other parts of the Poem which are confined to the ſtate of education in Connecticut, although the ſubject may be thought too particular to be reliſhed beyond the limits of a Commencement Auditory, yet if they ſhould ſerve to turn the attention of any part of the Public to the real ſituation of Yale College, it may juſtify the publication.

A POEM, &c.

ONCE more, thou ſacred Seat, the changing year
Hath circled heaven and bid the day appear,
That opes thy portals, gilds thy ſpiry dome,
And calls thy children from their joyous home.
Thro' ſeven long years hath war's terrific power
Rang'd every town and crimſon'd every ſhore,
Purſu'd fair Science from each happy ſeat,
Rav'd in her domes and forc'd her laſt retreat,
And oft, Yalenſia, doom'd thy final fall,
While thy ſad Genius trembled for thy wall.
Now ſee, at laſt, the venerable train,
Thine elder ſons aſcend thy courts again!
We joy the reverend, happy throng to ſee,
We wake thy own bleſt Muſe, and bid her ſing to thee.
Long have we liv'd beneath thy nurturing care,
And joy and friendſhip crown'd our labors there;
No more within thoſe bliſsful haunts we dwell,
To all thy train we bid a long farewel;
One gentle graſp, one ſilent, ſorrowing tear,
And joys and friends forever diſappear;
Fate calls us hence the world's broad ſtage to tread,
Act a ſhort part, and mingle with the dead.
We go——but may thy glory ſtill aſcend,
Thy fame, thy virtues thro' the world extend;
Thy future ſons, a calm, delightful throng,
As following years ſhall lead their ſteps along,

To

To peace, to happineſs, to glory riſe,
Shine thro' the earth and brighten in the ſkies.
No ruffian force that treads the diſtant ſhore,
Shall dare invade thy peaceful labors more;
While the proud foes beneath our ſtandards yield,
And our brave brethren claim the crimſon field,
Within thy courts ſhall pride and ſlaughter ceaſe,
And genius dignify the walks of peace.
And oh! may ſome bleſt hand regard thy cries,
Some great, ſome liberal benefactor riſe,
Whoſe ſoul awakes at thy inſpiring call,
To lift thy ſpires, enlarge thy ſcanty wall,
Who joys to aid the Muſe's feeble voice,
And bid bright learning in her ſons rejoice,
Bid wealth and dignity thy ſteps attend,
And rival arts and rival virtues blend,
O'er all the happy land thy beauties ſhine,
And every joy, and every wiſh be thine.
Ye patriot worthies, whom theſe ſtrains aſſail,
Ye Reverend Sires, and all ye ſons of Yale,
Behold our ſeat, by former bounty given,
Pride of our land and favorite child of heaven,
Whence liberal arts and liberal thoughts ye drew,
When few her children and her wants were few;
Now ſee, the narrow bounds can ſcarce contain
Half the throng'd numbers of her joyous train,
While every friend averts th' unconſcious eye,
And power, and intereſt paſs unheeding by.

As

As late, when war's grim terrors ſought repoſe,
And evening miſts and diſtant fires aroſe,
Far in a gloomy grove I penſive ſtray'd,
Where death's pale phantoms walk'd the midnight ſhade,
Thin clouds of ſickening damps, o'er ether driven,
Obſcur'd the ſtars and ſhut the eye from heaven;
Unwonted ſighs within my boſom roſe,
Cities o'erturn'd and all my country's woes
Pour'd on my heart; but chief thy feeble cries,
Neglected Science, bade my griefs ariſe.
I ſaw, from Briton's Iſle, thy genius flown,
In theſe fair climes to fix a nobler throne,
While here thy ſons the peaceful myrtle yield,
To pluck the crimſon laurel of the field.
I ſaw thy ſeats to ſcenes of ſlaughter turn'd,
Thy walls defac'd, thy faireſt labours burn'd;
E'en Yale, thy loveliеſt handmaid, now no more,
Knew the gay ſmiles of youth ſhe knew before,
Her funds decreas'd, her ſtrength, her int'reſt fled,
Her friends neglectful, and her Hoſmer dead.
Now a calm ſplendor burſt the ſaddening gloom,
And gales etherial breath'd a glad perfume,
Mild in the midſt a form celeſtial ſhone,
Rob'd in the veſtments of the riſing ſun;
Tall roſe his ſtature, dignity and grace
Mov'd in his limbs and wanton'd in his face,
His folding mantle flow'd in eaſy pride,
His harp divine lay uſeleſs by his ſide,

His

His locks in curls from myrtle chaplets hung
And ſounds melodious melted from his tongue.
" Mortal, attend, behold before thee ſtand
Learning's bright Genius, guardian of the land;
Let grief no more awake the piteous ſtrain,
Nor think fair Science left her heaven in vain.
Awhile my ſkill muſt guide the wild affray,
Range the red field and ſweep thy foes away,
Soon ſhall this arm a milder ſceptre bear,
And bleſt Valenſia prove my favorite care.
Mean time her friends her glory ſhall attend,
Enlarge her ſtores and bid her walls aſcend;
Bid every art from that pure fountain flow,
All that the Muſe can ſing or man can know;
The various branches various teachers claim,
And univerſal knowledge lift her fame.
And ſee! e'er long in that delightful ſeat,
Her ſons and friends, a numerous concourſe, meet;
Once more to view her, greet her youthful train,
And hear her feeble, ſaddening voice complain.
Go thou, in pride of youth, attend them there,
And theſe commands in ſtrains melodious bear.
Say tis for them to ſtretch the liberal hand,
While war's dread tumults yet involve the land,
Suſtain her drooping, rear her radiant eyes,
And bid her future fame begin to riſe.
Tell them the wild commotions ſoon ſhall ceaſe,
And bleſt Columbia hail the charms of peace,

Where

Where reſt the future deeds on earth deſign'd
To raiſe, to dignify and bleſs mankind.
  While Europe's numerous courts my cauſe attend,
And mutual intereſt fix the mutual friend,
Behold, from each far realm, what glories ſhine!
Their power, their commerce and their ſcience mine.
And here, what roving views before them ſpread!
Where this new empire lifts her daring head!
What wide extent her waving enſigns claim!
Lands yet unknown and ſtreams without a name.
Where the deep gulph unfolds Floridia's ſhore,
To where Ontario bids hoarſe Laurence roar;
Where Miſſiſippi's waves their ſources boaſt,
Where groves and floods and realms and climes are loſt,
To where the mild Atlantic's length'ning tide,
Laves numerous towns, and ſwells their naval pride.
And ſee! by nature's hand o'er all beſtow'd,
The laſt pure poliſh of the forming God.
What various grandeur ſtrikes the gladdening eyes!
Bays ſtretch their arms and mountains lift the ſkies;
The lakes, unfolding, point the ſtreams their way,
The plains, the hills their lengthening ſkirts diſplay,
The vales draw forth, fair wave the glimmering wilds,
And all the majeſty of nature ſmiles.
  On this broad theatre, unbounded ſpread,
In different ſcenes, what countleſs throngs muſt tread.
Soon as the new form'd empire, riſing fair,
Calms her brave ſons now breathing from the war.

Unfolds

Unfolds her harbours, ſpreads the genial ſoil,
And welcomes freemen to the chearful toil,
What numerous ſages muſt exalt her name!
What numerous bards muſt tell the world her fame!
What numerous chiefs beneath my forming care,
Muſt blaze in arms and ward the waſte of war!
While every art and all the graces meet,
To form her thouſands to the cares of State,
To heal pale ſickneſs, bid diſeaſes ceaſe,
And ſound the tidings of eternal peace.
Thoſe muſt ariſe the preſent age to lead,
And following millions hail the paths they tread.
Such gladdening views will ope the bounteous ſtore
The graſp of intereſt and the pride of power,
Yalenſia's friends ſhall thus attend her call,
And youths unnumber'd bleſs the favorite wall.
And tho' thou ſeeſt the rage of ſlaughter roll,
And different views thy wayward race controul,
Tho' ſtill oppos'd their intereſt, and their laws,
And every ſceptre leads a different cauſe,
Yet thro' the whole the ſame progreſſive plan,
Which draws, for mutual ſuccour, man to man,
From men to tribes, from tribes to nations ſpreads,
And private ties to public compact leads,
Shall riſe by ſlow degrees, and ſtill extend,
Their power their intereſt and their paſſions blend,
Their wars grow milder, policies enlarge,
Increaſing nations feel the general charge,

From

Form broad alliances for mutual aid,
Mingle their manners and extend their trade,
Till each remoteſt realm, by friendſhip join'd,
Link in the chain and harmonize mankind,
The union'd banner be at laſt unfurl'd,
And wave triumphant round the accordant world.
Already now commencing glories riſe,
The work begins beneath yon northern ſkies;
The Ruſſian foreſts to the deep advance,
The ports unfold, the glimmering navies dance,
For commerce arm'd, the different powers combine,
And heaven approving aids the bleſt deſign.
Tho' rival regions ſtill the combat wage,
And hold in bickering ſtrife the unſettled age,
Yet no rude war, that ſweeps the crimſon plain,
Shall dare diſturb the labors of the main;
For heaven, impartial to the earth born race,
Bade one broad circling deep their ſhores embrace,
Spread to all realms the ſame wide, watry way
Liberal as air and unconfin'd as day,
That every diſtant land the wealth might ſhare,
Exchange their wants and fill their treaſures there,
Their ſpeech aſſimilate, their empires blend,
And laws and mildneſs thro' the world extend.
Raiſe now thine eye, the haſtening years ſhall roll,
And theſe glad ſcenes delight thy riſing ſoul."
We then beheld, 'till where in lonely pride,
The far, blue Baltic pours his laboring tide;

At once in gathering ſquadrons, from the north,
The mingling ſtreamers lead the nations forth;
From diſſerent ſhores unnumber'd maſts ariſe,
And wave their peaceful curtains to the ſkies;
Broader and broader ſtill the wings unfold,
All Europe's coaſts the ſtreaming pomp behold,
From Gallia's ports, from Albion's hoary height,
United flags are pointed into ſight;
Where broad Hiſpania's ſtrand two oceans lave,
And the rich Tagus mingles with the wave,
The countleſs navies lift their banners wide,
And ſtream their glories o'er the foamy tide;
While thro' the glimmering Strait, in long array;
Pour'd from the fleets that croud the midland ſea,
The ſails look forth and ſwell their beauteous pride,
With wider waves and bolder barks to glide;
While far, far diſtant, where the watry way
Spreads the blue borders of deſcending day,
The miſty ſails advance in lengthening ſweep,
Pride of the weſtern world and daughters of the deep.
From all the bounds that meet the Atlantic wave,
While to our view the crouded ſquadrons heave,
In ſign of union, each advancing line,
Leads a calm nation, bids their banners join,
Till far as pole from pole, the cloudlike train
Skirts the dim heavens and ſhades the whitening main.
We ſaw, in other ſeas and other ſkies,
With equal pomp unnumber'd ſtreamers riſe;

Where

Where Aſia's iſles and utmoſt ſhores extend,
Like riſing ſuns the ſheeted maſts aſcend,
Sweep from all ports that cleave the orient ſtrand,
Load every ocean compaſs every land,
For peaceful commerce join the friendly train,
No more to combat on the watry plain.
We ſaw new barks to new diſcoveries roll,
Where unknown waves ſalute each diſtant pole;
Far in the north, where ſeas Pacific pour,
And ope Columbia from the Aſian ſhore,
The daring ſails th' unmeaſur'd flight purſue,
And iſles and countleſs nations riſe to view.
While ſome bold Sage, Columbus like, deſign'd
By other ſtars and waves to lead mankind,
With conſcious pride and philoſophic eye,
Treads the lone borders of the ſouthern ſky,
With perſevering toil the deeps explores,
Till there a new found world extends her length'ning ſhores
We ſaw, from each new realm, new arts aſcend,
New manners riſe, new wealth and power extend,
Allure the hero, feed the enquiring ſage,
Enlarge the genius, dignify the age,
Till laws and empires ſwell their riſing reign,
And their own navies whiten on the main.
Such views around us ſpread, when thus the guide,
" Theſe are my works that load the ſweeping tide;
Nor leſs my power the walks of ſcience claim,
In this fair land to raiſe her nobleſt name,

No

No more ſhall war diſturb her peaceful reign,
And call to fields of death her youthful train,
No more her views by wealth and power immur'd,
To rage alone and ſcenes of blood inur'd,
To teach the lance to thirſt for human gore,
To teach pale avarice to ſwell the ſtore,
To teach the milder arts the prize to yield,
Teach her own muſe the clangor of the field,
From ruin'd regions fill the voice of fame,
And call celeſtial fire to blaze a tyrant's name.
No more in bolder breaſts, to dwell confin'd
And hold her ſeat in half the human mind,
O'er gentler paſſions ſpread a harſh controul,
And light the glare of grandeur in the ſoul;
But ſofter virtues now demand her care,
And her own laurels grace the riſing fair.
Each rival ſex to rival arts aſpires,
Each aids alike the univerſal quires;
This bids bold commerce load the laboring main,
Or rear the peaceful harveſt of the plain;
That leads the hours of calm domeſtic toil,
And cheers the houſhold with an evening ſmile,
To each fond heart an equal taſk aſſign'd,
And equal virtues raiſe the mutual mind.
While daring thoughts and deeper tracts of truth
Thro' Philoſophic mazes lead the youth,
The ſofter arts demand a ſofter care,
And loves and graces dignify the fair.

While ſtates and empires, policies and laws
Lure the firm patriot in the bolder cauſe,
To ſtem the tide of power or ward the war,
Like me to ſuffer and like me to dare,
Behold, with equal dignity and grace,
The matron virtues guide her peaceful race
A pleaſing taſk her tender boſom warms,
The infant care now ſmiling in her arms,
Now ripening features, as the form improves,
Speak the dear image of the man ſhe loves;
She lures the riſing wiſh to thoughts refin'd,
And her own virtues ſwell the opening mind,
The prattling throng to liſping reaſon grown,
To ape her lovelineſs improve their own;
The ſire beholds the living beauties bloom,
Pride of his life and hope of years to come,
Aids every virtue taught by her to riſe,
Joins the delightful taſk, and trains them for the ſkies.
Thus different arts their kindred cares employ,
In fields of action or domeſtic joy,
Then, riſing from the uſeful to the fine,
Their mingling ſouls with rival glory ſhine.
From each pure taſte conſenting graces blend,
When the tall pillars of the dome aſcend,
The walls heave ſtately, arches bend on high,
And full proportion meets the roving eye.
Or when the garden to the impaſſion'd heart,
Unfiniſh'd lies and aſks the rural art,

With

With juſt deſign their equal fancies play,
From each alike the rambling beauties ſtray,
Till thro' the whole the different ſcenes prevail,
Here flows the fountain and there draws the dale,
The laughing lawn, the frowning footleſs grove,
And all the ſeats of innocence and love.
Nor leſs their power the living canvas warms,
And breaths the pencil'd paſſion into charms;
Heroes and beauties hear the wakening call,
And diſtant ages fill the ſtoried wall.
Two kindred arts the ſwelling ſtatue heave,
Wake the dead wax and teach the ſtone to live;
The daring chiſſel claims the bolder ſtrife,
To rouſe the ſceptred marble into life,
While fairer hands the livelier fire controul,
And into ſofter figures ſhed the ſoul.
In hearts attun'd the voice of muſic dwells,
Steals o'er the lip and into paſſion ſwells,
Swept by th' alternate hand the living lyre,
To mutual rapture wakes the floating fire,
Till all the magic melody of ſound,
Pours in delightful harmony around.
And when the breath of heaven from Angel quires,
With life divine the joyous Muſe inſpires,
In rival boſoms, ſee the Goddeſs glow!
And bind her bays on each conſenting brow.
The ſoaring bard awakes the trembling ſtring,
Virtues and loves and heavenly themes to ſing;

No

No more of vengeful chiefs and bickering Gods,
Where ocean crimſons and Olympus nods,
Or heavens, convulſing rend the dark profound,
To chain fierce Titans to the groaning ground,
But, fir'd by milder themes, and charms refin'd,
Beam'd from the beauties of the fair one's mind,
His ſoul awakes the peace Inſpiring ſong,
And life and happineſs the ſtrain prolong.
To moral beauties bids the world attend,
And jarring realms in ſocial compact blend;
Bids laws extend and commerce ſtretch the wing,
Far diſtant ſhores their barter'd tributes bring;
He ſees the nations join, their bliſs increaſe,
(Leagu'd in his lays) and ſings them into peace.
While pleas'd, the Muſe divides her equal care,
And the ſame ardor warms the liſtening fair;
From his pure breath ſhe lights a bolder flame,
The ſame her genius and her flight the ſame,
In mutual ſmiles the borrow'd graces play,
In mutual ſweetneſs ſlide the hours away,
In mutual aid the borrow'd numbers roll,
And ſwell'd to rapture breathes the mutual ſoul.
From their own loves, thus ſoften'd and refin'd,
The general wiſh extends to all mankind,
The neighbour's cares, the family, the friend
Pour on the heart, and in the boſom blend;
The poor, the ſtranger find a welcome home,
The vagrant foot is pointed where to roam,

The

The eye of anguiſh, when no help is near,
Looks the fond wiſh and finds the mingling tear.
E'en to their foes their equal goodneſs bends,
And hoſtile minds are ſoften'd into friends.
And when their lays have pour'd the bounteous mind,
In warm benevolence, to all their kind,
They lift the bolder note, the raptures glow,
To loves pure ſource whence all her ſtreamlets flow.
Rapt into viſion of the bright abode,
From angel harps they catch th' inſpiring God;
Thro' heavens, o'er-canopy'd by heavens, they ſoar,
Where floods of light in boundleſs beauty pour,
Seraphs and ſyſtem'd worlds innumerous move,
Link'd in the chain of harmonizing love;
Thence following down, th' effulgent glory trace,
Which brought ſalvation to their kindred race.
Thus, on the ſtream of life, with gentle ſweep,
They roll delightful to the welcome deep,
Where, unconfin'd, their ſpirits gently ſail,
View happier climes and taſte a purer gale;
Thro' ether's boundleſs realms together riſe,
And claim their kindred manſions in the ſkies;
There fill the rapture of th' adoring throng,
Whoſe lays on earth prelude the heavenly ſong."

PSALMS

which were omitted in

DOCTOR WATTS's Verſion;

To which is added, a Number of

HYMNS.

The whole contained in the New Edition of Pſalms and Hymns.

By JOEL BARLOW

HARTFORD:

PRINTED BY BARLOW AND BABCOCK,

M,DCC,LXXXV.

Dr Watts, in his version of the Psalms, thought proper to omit the 28, 43, 52, 54, 59, 64, 70, 78, 88, 108, 137, & 150 th. as he supposed the subject of them fully taken up in other Psalms.

But in order to furnish a complete version of all the Psalms, the General Association of the State of Connecticut desired Mr Barlow to correct Dr Watts collection, accommodating them to the use of Americans, & to supply the deficiences.

PSALM XLIII.

Psalm XXVIII. Long Metre.

God the Refuge of the Afflicted.

1 TO thee, O Lord, I raiſe my cries;
My fervent prayer in mercy hear;
For ruin waits my trembling ſoul,
If thou refuſe a gracious ear.

2 When ſuppliant tow'rd thy holy hill,
I lift my mournful hands to pray,
Afford thy grace, nor drive me ſtill,
With impious hypocrites away.

3 To ſons of falſehood, that deſpiſe
The works and wonders of thy reign,
Thy vengeance gives the due reward,
And ſinks their ſouls to endleſs pain.

4 But, ever bleſſed be the Lord,
Whoſe mercy hears my mournful voice,
My heart, that truſted in his word,
In his ſalvation ſhall rejoice.

5 Let every ſaint, in ſore diſtreſs,
By faith approach his Saviour God;
Then grant, O Lord, thy pardoning grace,
And feed thy church with heavenly food.

Psalm XLIII. Common Metre.

Safety in Divine Protection.

1 JUDGE me, O God, and plead my cauſe
Againſt a ſinful race;
From vile oppreſſion and deceit
Secure me by thy grace.

2 On thee my ſtedfaſt hope depends,
And am I left to mourn?
To ſink in ſorrows, and in vain,
Implore thy kind return?

3 Oh ſend thy light to guide my feet,
And bid thy truth appear,

Conduct me to thy holy hill,
To taſte thy mercies there.

Then to thy altar, oh my GOD,
My joyful feet ſhall riſe,
And my triumphant ſongs ſhall praiſe,
The GOD that rules the ſkies.

5 Sink not, my ſoul, beneath thy fear,
Nor yield to weak deſpair;
For I ſhall live to praiſe the LORD,
And bleſs his guardian care.

PSALM LII. Common Metre.

The diſappointment of the wicked.

1 WHY ſhould the mighty make their boaſt,
And heavenly grace deſpiſe?
In their own arm they put their truſt,
And fill their mouth with lies.

2 But God in vengeance ſhall deſtroy,
And drive them from his face;
No more ſhall they his church annoy,
Nor find on earth a place.

3 But like a cultur'd olive grove,
Dreſs'd in immortal green,
Thy children, blooming in thy love,
Amid thy courts are ſeen.

4 On thine eternal grace, O Lord,
Thy ſaints ſhall reſt ſecure,
And all, who truſt thy holy word,
Shall find ſalvation ſure.

PSALM LII. Long Metre.

The folly of ſelf-dependence.

1 WHY ſhould the haughty hero boaſt,
His vengeful arm, his warlike hoſt,
While blood defiles his cruel hand,
And deſolation waſtes the land.

2 He joys to hear the captive's cry,
The widow's groan, the orphan's ſigh:
And when the wearied ſword would ſpare,
His falſehood ſpreads the fatal ſnare.

3 He triumphs in the deeds of wrong,
And arms with rage his impious tongue,
With pride proclaims his dreadful power,
And bids the trembling world adore

4 But God beholds, and with a frown,
Caſts to the duſt his honours down:
The righteous freed, their hopes recal,
And hail the proud oppreſſor's fall.

5 How low th' inſulting tyrant lies,
Who dared th' eternal Power deſpiſe;
And vainly deem'd with envious joy,
His arm almighty to deſtroy.

6 We praiſe the Lord, who heard our cries,
And ſent ſalvation from the ſkies;
The ſaints, who ſaw our mournful days,
Shall join our grateful ſongs of praiſe.

PSALM LIV. Common Metre.

1 BEHOLD us, Lord, and let our cry
Before thy throne aſcend,
Caſt thou on us a pitying eye,
And ſtill our lives defend.

2 For ſlaughtering foes inſult us round,
Oppreſſive, proud and vain,
They caſt thy temples to the ground,
And all our rites prophane.

3 Yet thy forgiving grace we truſt,
And in thy power rejoice;
Thine arm ſhall cruſh our foes to duſt,
Thy praiſe inſpire our voice.

4 Be thou with thoſe whoſe friendly hand,
Upheld us in diſtreſs,
Extend thy truth through every land,
And ſtill thy people bleſs.

PSALM LXX.

PSALM LIX. Short Metre.

Prayer for national deliverance.

1 FROM foes, that round us riſe,
O GOD of heaven, defend,
Who brave the vengeance of the ſkies,
And with thy ſaints contend.

2 Behold, from diſtant ſhores,
And deſert wilds they come,
Combine for blood their barbarous force,
And through thy cities roam.

3 Beneath the ſilent ſhade,
Their ſecret plots they lay,
Our peaceful walls by night invade,
And waſte the fields by day.

4 And will the GOD of grace,
Regardleſs of our pain,
Permit ſecure that impious race,
To riot in their reign?

5 In vain their ſecret guile,
Or open force they prove;
His eye can pierce the deepeſt veil,
His hand their ſtrength remove.

6 Yet ſave them, Lord, from death,
Leſt we forget their doom;
But drive them with thine angry breath,
Through diſtant lands to roam.

7 Then ſhall our grateful voice
Proclaim our guardian GOD;
The nations round the earth rejoice,
And ſound the praiſe abroad.

PSALM LXX. Common Metre.

Protection againſt Perſonal Enemies.

1 IN haſte, O GOD, attend my call,
Nor hear my cries in vain;
Oh let thy ſpeed prevent my fall,
And ſtill my hope ſuſtain.

P S A L M LXXIX.

2 When foes inſidious wound my name,
And tempt my ſoul aſtray,
Then let them fall with laſting ſhame,
To their own plots a prey.

3 While all that love thy name rejoice,
And glory in thy word,
In thy ſalvation raiſe their voice,
And magnify the Lord.

4 O thou my help in time of need,
Behold my ſore diſmay;
In pity haſten to my aid,
Nor let thy grace delay.

PSALM LXXIX. Long Metre.

For the diſtreſs of War.

1 BEHOLD, O GOD, what cruel foes,
Thy peaceful heritage invade;
Thy holy temple ſtands defil'd,
In duſt thy ſacred walls are laid.

2 Wide o'er the vallies, drench'd in blood,
Thy people fall'n in death remain;
The fowls of heaven their fleſh devour,
And ſavage beaſts divide the ſlain.

3 Th' inſulting foes, with impious rage,
Reproach thy children to their face;
"Where is your GOD of boaſted power,
"And where the promiſe of his grace."

4 Deep from the priſon's horrid glooms,
Oh hear the mournful captives ſigh,
And let thy ſovereign power reprieve,
The trembling ſouls condemn'd to die.

PSALM LXXXVIII. As the 113th.

Loſs of Friends, and abſence of Divine Grace.

1 O GOD of my ſalvation, hear
My nightly groan, my daily prayer,
That ſtill employ my waſting breath;
My ſoul, declining to the grave,

Implores thy ſovereign power to ſave
From dark deſpair and laſting death.

2 Thy wrath lies heavy on my ſoul,
And waves of ſorrows o'er me roll,
While duſt and ſilence ſpread the gloom
My friends, belov'd in happier days,
The dear companions of my ways,
Deſcend around me to the tomb.

3 As, loſt in lonely grief, I tread
The mournful manſions of the dead,
Or to ſome throng'd aſſembly go;
Through all alike I rove alone,
While, here forgot and there unknown,
The change renews my piercing woe.

4 And why will GOD neglect my call?
Or who ſhall profit by my fall,
When life departs and love expires?
Can duſt and darkneſs praiſe the Lord?
Or wake, or brighten at his word,
And tune the harp with heavenly quires.

5 Yet thro' each melancholy day,
I've pray'd to thee, and ſtill will pray,
Imploring ſtill thy kind return.---
But oh! my friends, my comforts, fled,
And all my kindred of the dead
Recall my wandering thoughts to mourn.

PSALM CVIII. Common Metre.

A Song of Praiſe.

1 AWAKE, my ſoul, to ſound his praiſe,
Awake my harp to ſing;
Join all my powers the ſong to raiſe,
And morning incenſe bring.

2 Among the people of his care,
And thro' the nations round;
Glad ſongs of praiſe will I prepare,
And there his name reſound.

3 Be thou exalted, O my GOD,
Above the ſtarry train;
Diffuſe thy heavenly grace abroad,
And teach the world thy reign.

4 So ſhall thy choſen ſons rejoice,
And throng thy courts above;
While ſinners hear thy pardoning voice,
And taſte redeeming love.

PSALM CXXXVII.

The Babylonian Captivity.

1 ALONG the banks where Babel's current flows,
Our captive bands in deep diſponde nce ſtray'd,
While Zion's fall in ſad remembrance roſe,
Her friends, her children mingled with the dead.

2 The tuneleſs harp, that once with joy we ſtrung.
When praiſe employ'd and mirth inſpir'd the lay,
In mournful ſilence on the willows hung;
And growing grief prolong'd the tedious day.

3 The barbarous tyrants, to increaſe the woe,
With taunting ſmiles a ſong of Zion claim;
Bid ſacred praiſe in ſtrains melodious flow,
While they blaſpheme the great Jehovah's name.

4 But how, in heathen chains and lands unknown,
Shall Iſrael's ſons, a ſong of Zion raiſe?
O hapleſs Salem, GOD's terreſtial throne,
Thou land of glory, ſacred mount of praiſe.

5 If e'er my memory loſe thy lovely name,
If my cold heart neglect my kindred race,
Let dire deſtruction ſi eze this guilty frame;
My hand ſhall periſh and my voice ſhall ceaſe.

6 Yet ſhall the Lord, who hears when Zion calls,
O'ertake her foes with terror and diſmay,
His arm avenge her deſolated walls,
And raiſe her children to eternal day.

PSALM CXL. Common Metre.

1 PROTECT us, Lord, from fatal harm;
Behold our riſing woes;
We truſt alone thy powerful arm,
To ſcatter all our foes.

2 Their tongue is like a poiſon'd dart,
Their thoughts are full of guile,
While rage and carnage ſwell their heart,
They wear a peaceful ſmile.

3 O GOD of grace, thy guardian care,
When foes without invade,
Or ſpread within a deeper ſnare,
Supplies our conſtant aid.

4 Let falſhood flee before thy face,
Thy heavenly truth extend,
All nations taſte thy heavenly grace,
And all deluſion end.

5 With daily bread the poor ſupply,
The cauſe of juſtice plead,
And be thy church exalted high,
With Chriſt the glorious head.

HYMNS AND SPIRITUAL SONGS.

HYMN LXIII.

Our Saviour preſent at his Table.

COME let us join the ſacred ſong
To our aſcended Lord;
Ye ſaints and angels round his throne,
And we around his board.

2 Tho' rais'd beyond the worlds of light,
His brighter glories ſhine,
Where purer ſouls enjoy the ſight
And preſence more divine.

3 Yet here, unſeen by mortal eyes,
The boundleſs God reſides,
Renews the atoning ſacrifice
And o'er the feaſt preſides.

4 Let every hand that ſhares the food
And every heart with fear,
Feel the full preſence of the God,
That ſpreads his bounties here:

5 But Oh, the love, the wondrous love
The bleeding Lord diſplays,
Shall earth's united ſongs improve,
And heaven's eternal praiſe.

HYMN LXV.

Innumerable mercies acknowledged.

IN glad amazement, Lord, I ſtand,
Amidſt the bounties of thy hand;
How numberleſs thoſe bounties are!
How rich, how various and how fair!

2 But oh, what poor returns I bring!
What lifeleſs ſongs of praiſe I ſing!
Lord, I confeſs, with humble ſhame,
My offerings ſcarce deſerve the name.

3 Fain would my labouring heart deviſe
Some nobler gift and ſacrifice;
It ſinks beneath the mighty load
That I ſhould render to my God.

To him I conſecrate my praiſe,
And vow the remnant of my days;
Enlarge my ſoul with grace divine,
And make it worthier to be thine.

5 Give me at length an angel's tongue,
To ſound thro' heaven the grateful ſong;
A theme ſo great, my voice ſhall raiſe,
And crown eternity with praiſe.

HYMN LXVI.

For a vacant Congregation.

1 O God of heaven, whoſe gentle ray,
Illumes the worlds of light,
Thy wiſdom rules the realms of day,
And leads the hoſt of night.

2 Behold thy waiting ſervants ſtand,
And claim with feeble cries,
Some ſkilful guide with gentle hand
To lead us to the ſkies.

3 While abſent from thy temple, Lord
Like wandering flocks we ſtray
We loſe the memory of thy word
And waſte the ſacred day.

4 And when, within theſe walls of thine
We find our wonted place;
How faint our feeble voices join
To ſeek thy pardoning grace.

5 Almighty Saviour, hear our prayer,
Some choſen ſervant raiſe,

For us the bread of life to ſhare
And help our lips to praiſe.

6 Then in thy houſe, with joy unknown
We'll raiſe a nobler ſong,
Till we ſhall meet around thy throne,
And join the heavenly throng.

HYMN LXVII.

For a New-Year's Day.

1 ETERNAL Source of every joy,
Thy praiſe ſhall every voice employ,
While we within thy courts appear,
And ſing the bounties of the year.

2 As worlds of glory round thee roll,
Thy hand ſupports the ſtedfaſt pole,
Directs the ſun what hour to riſe,
And darkneſs when to veil the ſkies.

3 The flowery Spring at thy command
Embalms the air, and paints the land;
The blazing beams of Summer ſhine
To raiſe the corn and cheer the vine.

4 Thy hand in Autumn richly pours
The copious fruits along the ſhores,
While wintry ſtorms direct our eyes
With fear and wonder to the ſkies.

5 Seaſons, and months, and weeks, and days
Demand returning ſongs of praiſe;
The opening light and evening ſhade
Shall ſee the cheerful homage paid.

6 And Oh, may our harmonious tongues
In worlds unknown purſue the ſongs;
And in thoſe brighter courts adore,
Where days and years revolve no more.

H Y M N LXVIII.

A Hymn for Marriage.

1 GREAT God, who form'd for ſocial joys
Our natures by thy power and grace,
And join'd in bleſt connubial ties,
The parents of our favour'd race.

2 Our Saviour, our aſcended Lord,
In Cana once a heavenly gueſt,
Whoſe bounty cheer'd the friendly board
Whoſe preſence grac'd the nuptial feaſt.

3 Attend with ſmiles of heavenly love,
The pair thy ſacred laws combine;
Their union bleſs, their vows approve,
And crown the rites with grace divine.

4 Let love aſſiſt their mutual toils,
And every ſocial bliſs beſtow;
Increaſe each joy with friendly ſmiles,
And ſhare and ſoften every woo.

5 While each a kindly aid imparts,
To run ſecure the heavenly race;
And make their dwelling and their hearts,
Perpetual temples of thy praiſe.

6 When death diſſolves theſe ſacred ties,
May each to happier realms remove;
There meet and range the peaceful ſkies,
In bands of everlaſting love.

THE END.

MEDITATIOMS

Meditations on DEATH and the GRAVE.

1 I CRAVE your calm atttention now
Till I reveal my Mind to you,
And tell you where my Thoughts were led
Out in the Tombs among the dead.

2 'Twas when the Care of Life had fled
And Night's dark curtain ſpread his ſhade,
And ſweet Repoſe had cloſ'd mine Eyes
I heard a voice that bid me riſe——

3 Ariſe, go view your other Bed
That death is making with the dead:
Another dwelling you muſt have,
Though little thought on, 'tis the Grave.

4 O ſolemn, ſolemn was the Time
When firſt this Meſſenger came in,
For to invite me for to come
And view my lodging in the Tomb.

5 What frightful Apprehenſions run
In trickling Streams through ev'ry Vein.
Dare not refuſe, dare not obey——
Beneath theſe frightful Thoughts I lay.

6 And here I ſhrunk, I darn't comply,
But yet he did repeat this cry:
I yielded then to go and head
The gloomy Manſions of the dead.

7 Then I aroſe at his command
And went to view the ſolemn Land

While

While thoughts moſt frightfully did roll,
That overwhelm'd my fainting Soul.

8 So great, ſo ſolemn was the thought
To think how ſoon I muſt be brought
To view Death's gloomy dark abode,
I fell beneath the heavy load.

9 But ſoon a Voice to me was ſaid,
Ariſe, ariſe, be not afraid;
Why do you fear to go and view
This lodging ſoon will be for you,

10 Then I received ſtrength and pow'r
Sufficient for that very Hour.
Then walking onwards to the Gate,
That leads unto this ſolemn Place.

11 How ſlow, how ſolemn did the Door
Move back for me to enter there,
Till I had paſs'd, there it remain'd,
Then ſlowly moved back again.

12 Soon as we got within the Wall
My guide gave me another call,
Saying, come ſee the ſeat of ſin,
Walk round and ſee what it has done.

13 Then I went forth at his command,
Walk'd round and viewed that ſolemn land,
There I beheld the fatal Wound,
Lie mouldering there beneath the Ground.

14 My thoughts ſoon back to Adam run
And cried out, what have you done?
Is this the dreadful Wound you gave,
A Wound that ſinks down to the Grave.

15 But I another wonder found
To view the ſolemn Court around.
All bound in Bands of Vanity,
In perfect peace and Harmony.

16 How ſtrangely did this ſight appear
To ſee the great and ſmall lie here?

The

The rich, the poor, the bond and free
In band of Harmony agree.

17 There lay the gallant and the brave
Both mouldering in the ſilent Grave.
The Fool, the Beggar fill'd a ſeat
As high as any in this Court.

18 There mighty Kings and Princes lay
Chain'd down in ſilence in the Clay.
There Counſellors and Judges ceaſe
To grant Advice or give releaſe.

19 There I beheld the higheſt truſt,
Pull'd down, lay level'd with the Duſt,
The great, the mighty and the proud,
They all lay equal'd in the croud.

20 Sworn Enemies there I beheld
Had laid aſide both ſword and ſhield,
The Hand forever had forgot
To draw the ſpear, or heave a ſhot.

21 The ſlandrous and backſliding Tongue
Lay bound in ſilence in the Tomb:
the furious Temper's ceaſe to rage
And lay in Death's cold gloomy ſhades.

22 The bold Plaſphemer's Tongue lay bound
With chains of ſilence in the ground:
His Oaths that once defil'd the Air
Lay bound in Death's cold Priſon there.

23 I ſaw the vigorous boldeſt Face
Lay mouldering in this ſolemn Place;
The active Limbs loſt all ther Power
In Death's deciſive ſolemn Hour.

24 There I beheld and lo I found
A lovely youth lye in the Ground:
'Twas but a little while before
I ſaw him flouriſh like a Flower.

25 But O the ſhaft of Death was ſlung
And cut the tender Flower down.

Death's

Death's ſharpen'd Arrows gave the wound,
And now he moulders in the Ground.

26 The lovely Fleſh, the ſparkling Eyes
Lay mouldering in Eternity;
The blooming Cheek that once was worn
Is now a Feaſt for odious Worms.

27 The lovely Frame the active Hands
Lay bound in Death's cold Priſon Bands,
The burning Fleſh, the harmleſs Tongue
Lay mouldering in the ſilent Tomb.

28 The tender Skin, the curious Frame,
The blooming Countenance was gone,
The ſofteſt Fleſh, the lovely Charms
Lay claſp'd in Death's cold icy arms.

29 But here my thoughts they took a wing,
Flew back and view'd the Race of Man,
And lo I found the num'rous Throng
Lay down in Death's cold ſhady Tomb.

30 Alas! the Ruins here I found
Of all Mankind, lay in the Ground;
From Adam down unto this Day.
They all lay mouldering in Clay.

31 What Millions! Millions! had been ſlain
By Death, that conquering, mighty King?
What crowds of num'rous corps I found
Lay cold and mouldering in the Ground.

32 Here was a melancholly Land;
And Death, the King of Terrors reign'd,
His mighty Hand his Sword he hurl'd,
Made Inroads through the lower World.

33 But ah how frail this num'rous crowd?
I view'd grim Death not ſatisfy'd
Although he'd ſtruck from Shore to Shore,
The hungry Grave ſtill cried more.

34 No nor enough he ne'er will have
Till he has crouded in the Grave;

His

His Mouth will never be confin'd
Till he's devour'd all human Kind.

35 This faint Idea mine Eyes have ſeen
Of things that's over, paſt and gone——
And now upon another Theme
Of things that's preſent, and to come.

MY Mind it has been faintly lead
Down in the Tombs among the dead,
But on the living now I turn'd,
To view his Paths and where he's bound.

2 There I upon a Hill behold
Mine Eyes ſurvey'd the boundleſs World,
I ſaw all Nature's human race
Move ſwiftly on towards the Place.

3 Yonder I ſaw a num'rous crowd
All marching in this ſolemn Read,
What ſteady ſtep their feet did have,
Advancing forward to the Grave.

4 What countleſs Millions in the Band,
I ſaw them come from ev'ry Hand;
All Nature ſeem'd to move along
With equal ſpeed towards the Tomb.

5 I ſaw Death mounted on a Horſe,
And riding through this num'rous Hoſt;
His Darts with cruel Death did fly
Commiſſioned from God on high.

6 Some he would ſtrike with ſickneſs down
On Beds of languiſhing and pain,
And others with a mortal Shot
He'd ſtrike them dead upon the ſpot.

7 What great Commotions there remains,
Some mourning for the loſs of Friends,
Others on Beds of racking Pains
And groaning out expiring Pangs.

8 Others

8 Others were drinking with the drunk
Till all their active Powers were ſunk,
And ſome their idle Frolicks have,
Yet all lead forward to the Grave,

9 But here among the reſt I found
A few that follow'd Chriſt the Lamb;
With Heart and Hand they'd ſign'd their names
Choſe him their Captain and their King.

10 I ſaw ſome poor convicted youths,
Trembling at God's eternal Truths,
With earneſt Prayer they ſought to God
To waſh them in Chriſt Jeſus Blood.

11 I ſaw that little Company
Surrounded with the Enemy,
Satan was arm'd with all his Pow'r
Their precious Souls for to devour.

12 But Chriſt the Mediator ſtood
And plead before the Bar of God.
'Twas for theſe Souls whom Satan's bound
I ſpilt my Blood upon the Ground.

13 Th' almighty Judge he ſets them free
From Satan's Chains of ſlavery.
He takes them in the Arms of Love
And makes them heirs of Heaven above.

14 But O I ſaw ten thouſand run,
Stupid as ſtocks they do go on
In the broad Road that leads to Hell,
Where tortured Souls in Torment dwell.

15 What precious Moments do they waſte
To pleaſe their ſinful carnal Taſte?
Forgetful that their Souls muſt live
Eternally beyond the Grave.

16 Here they on carnal things do feaſt
Like dumb, like ſtupid thoughtleſs Beaſts,
And while on dainty Feaſts they dine,
Their precious Souls do ſtrave within.

17 Alas

17 Alas the Soul that is worth more
Than thouſand World of Golden and Ore,
When once 'tis loſt and no Relief
My Heart was filled with pain and Grief.

18 Trembling and ſorrow ſeiz'd me round,
In Prayer I fell upon the Ground.
My Soul addreſt God's holy Throne,
To ſhower his bleſſed Spirit down.

19 Almighty God, make bare thine Arm,
Jehovah ſound the loud Alarm.
Hell and Damnation is prepar'd
For thoſe that ſlight God's holy Word.

20 Shew Sinners their undone Eſtate;
Their precious Souls now lie at ſtake;
A few more ſinful ſteps remains
And they'r in everlaſting Flames.

21 Ariſe dead Souls, and beg of God,
To teach you how to read his Word,
And change your Heart by power Divine
That in your Heart may honor him

CONSPIRACY OF KINGS.

Eternal Truth, thy trump undaunted lend,
People and prieſts and courts and kings, attend;
While, borne on weſtern gales from that far ſhore
Where Juſtice reigns, and tyrants tread no more,
Th' unwonted voice, that no diſſuaſion awes,
That fears no frown, and ſeeks no blind applauſe,
Shall tell the bliſs that Freedom ſheds abroad,
The rights of nature and the gift of God.

Think not, ye knaves, whom meanneſs ſtyles the Great,
Drones of the Church and harpies of the State,——
Ye, whoſe curſt fires, for blood and plunder fam'd,
Sultans or kings or czars or emp'rors nam'd,
Taught the deluded world their claims to own,
And raiſe the creſted reptiles to a throne,——

Ye, who pretend to your dark hoſt was given
The lamp of life, the myſtic keys of heaven;
Whoſe impious arts with magic ſpells began
When ſhades of ign'rance veil'd the race of man;
Who change, from age to age, the ſly deceit
As Science beams, and Virtue learns the cheat;
Tyrants of double powers, the ſoul that blind,
To rob, to ſcourge, and brutalize mankind,——
Think not I come to croak with omen'd yell
The dire damnations of your future hell,
To bend a bigot or reform a knave,
By op'ning all the ſcenes beyond the grave.
I know your cruſted ſouls: while one defies
In ſceptic ſcorn the vengeance of the ſkies,
The other boaſts,—" I ken thee, Power divine,
" But fear thee not; th' avenging bolt is mine."

No! 'tis the preſent world that prompts the ſong,
The world we ſee, the world that feels the wrong,
The world of men, whoſe arguments ye know,
Of men, long curb'd to ſervitude and wo,

Men, rous'd from ſloth, by indignation ſtung,
Their ſtrong hands loos'd, and found their fearleſs tongue;
Whoſe voice of fire, whoſe deep-deſcending ſteel
Shall ſpeak to ſouls, and teach dull nerves to feel.

Think not (ah no! the weak deluſion ſhun,
Burke leads you wrong; the world is not his own),
Indulge not once the thought, the vapory dream,
The fool's repaſt, the mad-man's thread-bare theme,
That nations, riſing in the light of truth,
Strong with new life and pure regenerate youth,
Will ſhrink from toils ſo ſplendidly begun,
Their bliſs abandon and their glory ſhun,
Betray the truſt by Heav'n's own hand conſign'd,
The great concentred ſtake, the intereſt of mankind.

Ye ſpeak of Kings combin'd, ſome league that draws
Europe's whole force, to ſave your ſinking cauſe;
Of fancy'd hoſts by myriads that advance
To cruſh the untry'd power of new-born France.
Miſguided men! theſe idle tales deſpiſe;
Let one bright ray of reaſon ſtrike your eyes;

Show me your kings, the ſceptred horde parade,——
See their pomp vaniſh! ſee your viſions fade!
Indignant MAN reſumes the ſhaft he gave,
Diſarms the tyrant, and unbinds the ſlave,
Diſplays the unclad ſkeletons of kings *,
Spectres of power, and ſerpents without ſtings.
And ſhall mankind,—ſhall FRANCE, whoſe giant might
Rent the dark veil, and dragg'd them forth to light,
Heed now their threats in dying anguiſh toſt?
And She who fell'd the monſter, fear the ghoſt?
Bid young Alcides, in his graſp who takes,
And gripes with naked hand the twiſting ſnakes,
Their force exhauſted, bid him proſtrate fall,
And dread their ſhadows trembling on the wall.

But grant to kings and courts their ancient play,
Recall their ſplendour and revive their ſway;
Can all your cant and all your cries perſuade
One power to join you in your wild cruſade?
In vain ye ſearch to earth's remoteſt end;
No court can aid you, and no king defend.

* Oſſa vides regum vacuis exhauſta medullis.
JUVENAL, Sat. 8.

Not

Not the mad knave that S—— ſceptre ſtole,
Nor She, whoſe thunder ſhakes the northern pole;
Nor Frederic's widow'd ſword, that ſcorns to tell
On whoſe weak brow his crown reluctant fell.
Not the tri-ſceptred prince, of Auſtrian mould,
The ape of wiſdom and the ſlave of gold,
Thereſa's ſon, who, with a feeble grace,
Juſt mimics all the vices of his race;
For him no charm can foreign ſtrife afford,
Too mean to ſpend his wealth, too wiſe to truſt his ſword.

Peep o'er the Pyrenees,—but you'll diſdain
To break the dream that ſooths the Monk of Spain.
He counts his beads, and ſpends his holy zeal
To raiſe once more th' inquiſitorial wheel,
Prepares the faggot and the flame renews,
To roaſt the French, as once the Moors and Jews;
While abler hands the buſy taſk divide,
His Queen to dandle and his State to guide.

Ye aſk great Pitt to join your deſp'rate work,——
See how his annual aid confounds the Turk!

Like

Like a war-elephant his bulk he ſhows,
And treads down friends, when frighten'd by his foes.

Where then, forſaken villains, will ye turn?
Of France the outcaſt and of earth the ſcorn;
What new-made charm can diſſipate your fears?
Can Burke's mad foam, or Calonne's houſe of Peers *?
Can Artois' ſword, that erſt near Calpe's wall,
Where Crillon fought and Elliot was to fall,
Burn'd with the fire of fame, but harmleſs burn'd,
For ſheath'd the ſword remain'd, and in its ſheath return'd †?

Oh

* M. de Calonne, at an immenſe labour, and by the aid of his friends in England, has framed a Conſtitution for France, after the Engliſh model; the chief ornament of which is that "Corinthian capital of poliſhed ſociety," a Houſe of Peers. It is ſaid that, after debates and altercations which laſted ſix months, he has perſuaded the emigrant princes to agree to it. It only remains now for him and them to try on this new livery upon the French nation.

† Among the diſadvantages attending the lives of Princes, muſt be reckoned the ſingular difficulties with which they have to ſtruggle in acquiring a military reputation. A Duke of Cumberland, in order to become an Alexander, had to ride all the way to Culloden, and back again to London. Louis the Fourteenth was obliged to ſubmit to the fatigue of being carried on board of a ſplendid barge, and rowed acroſs the Rhine, about the ſame time that the French army croſſed it; and all this for the ſimple privilege of being placed above the Macedonian in the temple of Fame; and of cauſing this atchievement

Oh Burke, degenerate ſlave! with grief and ſhame
The Muſe indignant muſt repeat thy name.
Strange man, declare,—ſince, at creation's birth,
From crumbling Chaos ſprang this heav'n and earth.
Since wrecks and outcaſt relics ſtill remain,
Whirl'd ceaſeleſs round Confuſion's dreary reign,
Declare, from all theſe fragments, whence you ſtole
That genius wild, that monſtrous maſs of ſoul;
Where ſpreads the wideſt waſte of all extremes,
Full darkneſs frowns, and heav'n's own ſplendour beams;
Truth, Error, Falſehood, Rhetoric's raging tide,
And Pomp and Meanneſs, Prejudice and Pride,
Strain to an endleſs clang thy voice of fire,
Thy thoughts bewilder and thy audience tire.

ment to be celebrated, as more glorious than the paſſing of the Granicus: as may be ſeen on that modeſt monument in the Place Vendome in Paris.

The Count d'Artois has purchaſed, at a ſtill dearer rate, the fame of being ſtyled "le digne rejeton du grand Henri," and of being deſtined to command all the armies of Europe in re-eſtabliſhing the Monarchy of France. This champion of Chriſtendom ſet out, at the age of twenty-five, and travelled by land with a princely equipage, from Paris to Gibraltar; where he arrived juſt in time to ſee, at a convenient diſtance, Elliot's famous bonfire of the floating batteries. He then returned, covered with glory, by the way of Madrid; and arrived at Verſailles, amidſt the careſſes of the court and the applauſes of all Europe. The accompliſhment of this arduous enterpriſe has deſervedly placed him, in point of military fame, at the head of all the preſent branches of the illuſtrious houſe of Bourbon.

Like Phœbus' ſon, we ſee thee wing thy way,
Snatch the looſe reins, and mount the car of day,
To earth now plunging plough thy waſting courſe,
The great Sublime of weakneſs and of force.
But while the world's keen eye, with generous glance,
Thy faults could pardon and thy worth enhance,
When foes were huſh'd, when Juſtice dar'd commend,
And e'en fond Freedom claim'd thee as a friend,
Why in a gulph of baſeneſs ſink forlorn,
And change pure praiſe for infamy and ſcorn?

And didſt thou hope, by thy infuriate quill
To rouſe mankind the blood of realms to ſpill?
Then to reſtore, on death-devoted plains,
Their ſcourge to tyrants, and to man his chains?
To ſwell their ſouls with thy own bigot rage,
And blot the glories of ſo bright an age?
Firſt ſtretch thy arm, and, with leſs impious might,
Wipe out the ſtars, and quench the ſolar light:
" For heav'n and earth," the voice of God ordains,
" Shall paſs and periſh, but my word remains,"

Th'

Th' eternal WORD, which gave, in ſpite of thee,
REASON to man, that bids the man be free.

Thou could'ſt not hope: 'twas Heav'n's returning grace,
In kind compaſſion to our injur'd race,
Which ſtripp'd that ſoul, ere it ſhould flee from hence,
Of the laſt garb of decency or ſenſe,
Left thee its own foul horrors to diſplay,
In all the blackneſs of its native day,
To ſink at laſt, from earth's glad ſurface hurl'd,
The ſordid ſov'reign of the letter'd world.

In ſome ſad hour, ere death's dim terrors ſpread,
Ere ſeas of dark oblivion whelm thy head,
Reflect, loſt man,—If thoſe, thy kindred knaves,
O'er the broad Rhine whoſe flag rebellious waves,
Once draw the ſword; its burning point ſhall bring
To thy quick nerves a never-ending ſting;
The blood they ſhed thy weight of wo ſhall ſwell,
And their grim ghoſts for ever with thee dwell.

Learn

Learn hence, ye tyrants, ere ye learn too late,
Of all your craft th' inevitable fate.
The hour is come, the world's uncloſing eyes
Diſcern with rapture where its wiſdom lies;
From weſtern heav'ns th' inverted Orient ſprings,
The morn of man, the dreadful night of kings.
Dim, like the day-ſtruck owl, ye grope in light,
No arm for combat, no reſource in flight;
If on your guards your lingering hopes repoſe,
Your guards are men, and men you've made your foes;
If to your rocky ramparts ye repair,
* De Launay's fate can tell your fortune there.
No turn, no ſhift, no courtly arts avail,
Each maſk is broken, all illuſions fail;
Driv'n to your laſt retreat of ſhame and fear,
One counſel waits you, one relief is near:
By worth internal, riſe to ſelf-wrought fame,
Your equal rank, your human kindred claim;

* De Launay was the laſt governor of the Baſtille. His well-known exit, ſerving as a warning to others, ſaved the lives of many commanders of Fortreſſes in different parts of France during the revolution. It may probably have the ſame ſalutary effect in other countries.

'Tis

'Tis Reaſon's choice, 'tis Wiſdom's final plan,
To drop the monarch and aſſume the man.

Hail MAN, exalted title! firſt and beſt,
On God's own image by his hand impreſt;
To which at laſt the reas'ning race is driv'n,
And ſeeks anew what firſt it gain'd from Heav'n.
O MAN, my brother, how the cordial flame
Of all endearments kindles at the name!
In every clime, thy viſage greets my eyes,
In every tongue thy kindred accents riſe;
The thought expanding ſwells my heart with glee,
It finds a friend, and loves itſelf in thee.

Say then, fraternal family divine,
Whom mutual wants and mutual aids combine,
Say from what ſource the dire deluſion roſe,
That ſouls like ours were ever made for foes;
Why earth's maternal boſom, where we tread,
To rear our manſions and receive our bread,
Should bluſh ſo often for the race ſhe bore,
So long be drench'd with floods of filial gore;

Why to ſmall realms for ever reſt confin'd
Our great affections, meant for all mankind.
Though climes divide us; ſhall the ſtream or ſea,
That forms a barrier 'twixt my friend and me,
Inſpire the wiſh his peaceful ſtate to mar,
And meet his falchion in the ranks of war?

Not ſeas, nor climes, nor wild ambition's fire
In nations' minds could e'er the wiſh inſpire;
Where equal rights each ſober voice ſhould guide,
No blood would ſtain them, and no war divide.
'Tis dark deception, 'tis the glare of ſtate,
Man ſunk in titles, loſt in Small and Great;
'Tis Rank, Diſtinction, all the hell that ſprings
From thoſe prolific monſters, Courts and Kings.
Theſe are the vampires nurs'd on nature's ſpoils;
For theſe with pangs the ſtarving peaſant toils,
For theſe the earth's broad ſurface teems with grain,
Theirs the dread labours of the devious main;
And when the waſted world but dares refuſe
The gifts oppreſſive and extorted dues,

They bid wild ſlaughter ſpread the gory plains,
The life-blood guſhing from a thouſand veins,
Erect their thrones amid the ſanguine flood,
And dip their purple in the nation's blood.

The gazing crowd, of glittering State afraid,
Adore the Power their coward meanneſs made;
In war's ſhort intervals, while regal ſhows
Still blind their reaſon and inſult their woes.
What ſtrange events for proud Proceſſions call!
See kingdoms crowding to a Birth-night Ball!
See the long pomp in gorgeous glare diſplay'd,
The tinſel'd guards, the ſquadron'd horſe parade;
See herald's gay, with emblems on their veſt,
In tiſſu'd robes, tall, beauteous pages dreſt;
Amid ſuperior ranks of ſplendid ſlaves,
Lords, Dukes and Princes, titulary knaves,
Confus'dly ſhine their croſſes, gems and ſtars,
Sceptres and globes and crowns and ſpoils of wars.
On gilded orbs ſee thundering chariots roll'd,
Steeds, ſnorting fire, and champing bits of gold,

Prance

Prance to the trumpet's voice; while each aſſumes
A loftier gait, and lifts his neck of plumes.
High on a moving throne, and near the van,
The tyrant rides, the choſen ſcourge of man;
Clarions and flutes and drums his way prepare,
And ſhouting millions rend the troubled air;
Millions, whoſe ceaſeleſs toils the pomp ſuſtain,
Whoſe hour of ſtupid joy repays an age of pain.

Of theſe no more. From Orders, Slaves and Kings,
To thee, O MAN, my heart rebounding ſprings.
Behold th' aſcending bliſs that waits your call,
Heav'n's own bequeſt, the heritage of all.
Awake to wiſdom, ſeize the proffer'd prize;
From ſhade to light, from grief to glory riſe.
Freedom at laſt, with Reaſon in her train,
Extends o'er earth her everlaſting reign;
See Gallia's ſons, ſo late the tyrant's ſport,
Machines in war and ſycophants at court,
Start into men, expand their well-taught mind,
Lords of themſelves and leaders of mankind.

On equal rights their baſe of empire lies,
On walls of wiſdom ſee the ſtructure riſe;
Wide o'er the gazing world it towers ſublime,
A modell'd form for each ſurrounding clime.
To uſeful toils they bend their nobleſt aim,
Make patriot views and moral views the ſame,
Renounce the wiſh of war, bid conqueſt ceaſe,
Invite all men to happineſs and peace,
To faith and juſtice rear the youthful race,
With ſtrength exalt them and with ſcience grace,
Till Truth's bleſt banners, o'er the regions hurl'd,
Shake tyrants from their thrones, and cheer the waking world.

In northern climes, where feudal ſhades of late
Chill'd every heart and palſied every State,
Behold, illumin'd by th' inſtructive age,
That great phenomenon, a Sceptred Sage.
There Staniſlaus unfolds his prudent plan,
Tears the ſtrong bandage from the eyes of man,
Points the progreſſive march, and ſhapes the way,
That leads a realm from darkneſs into day.

And deign, for once, to turn a tranſient eye
To that wide world that ſkirts the weſtern ſky;
Hail the mild morning, where the dawn began,
The full fruition of the hopes of man.
Where ſage Experience ſeals the ſacred cauſe;
And that rare union, Liberty and Laws,
Speaks to the reas'ning race " to freedom riſe,
Like them be equal, and like them be wiſe."

HASTY-PUDDING:

IN THREE CANTOS.

WRITTEN AT CHAMBERY, IN SAVOY, JAN. 1793.

By JOEL BARLOW, Esq.

Omne tulit punctum qui miscuit utile dulci.

He makes a good breakfast who mixes pudding with molasses.

CANTO I.

Ye Alps audacious, thro' the Heavens that rise,
To cramp the day and hide me from the skies;
Ye Gallic flags, that o'er their heights unfurl'd,
Bear death to kings, and freedom to the world,
I sing not you. A softer theme I chuse,
A virgin theme, unconscious of the Muse,
But fruitful, rich, well suited to inspire
The purest frenzy of poetic fire.

Despise it not, ye Bards to terror steel'd,
Who hurl'd your thunders round the epic field;
Nor ye who strain your midnight throats to sing
Joys that the vineyard and the still-house bring;
Or on some distant fair your notes employ,
And speak of raptures that you ne'er enjoy.
I sing the sweets I know, the charms I feel,
My morning incense, and my evening meal,
The sweets of Hasty-Pudding. Come, dear bowl,
Glide o'er my palate, and inspire my soul.
The milk beside thee, smoking from the kine,
Its substance mingled, married in with thine,
Shall cool and temper thy superior heat,
And save the pains of blowing while I eat.
Oh! could the smooth, the emblematic song
Flow like thy genial juices o'er my tongue,
Could those mild morsels in my numbers chime,
And, as they roll in substance, roll in rhyme,
No more thy aukward unpoetic name
Should shun the Muse, or prejudice thy fame;
But rising grateful to the accustom'd ear,
All Bards should catch it, and all realms revere!
Assist me first with pious toil to trace
Thro' wrecks of time thy lineage and thy race;
Declare what lovely squaw, in days of yore,
(Ere great Columbus sought thy native shore)
First gave thee to the world; her works of fame
Have liv'd indeed, but liv'd without a name.
Some tawny Ceres, goddess of her days, [maize,
First learn'd with stones to crack the well-dry'd
Thro' the rough sieve to shake the golden show'r,
In boiling water stir the yellow flour.
The yellow flour, bestrew'd and stir'd with haste,
Swell in the flood and thickens to a paste,

Then puffs and wallops, rises to the brim,
Drinks the dry knobs that on the surface swim:
The knobs at last the busy ladle breaks,
And the whole mass its true consistence takes.
  Could but her sacred name, unknown so long,
Rise like her labors, to the sons of song,
To her, to them, I'd consecrate my lays,
And blow her pudding with the breath of praise.
If 'twas Oella, whom I sang before,
I here ascribe her one great virtue more.
Not thro' the rich Peruvian realms alone
The fame of Sol's sweet daughter should be known,
But o'er the world's wide climes should live secure,
Far as his rays extend, as long as they endure.
  Dear Hasty-Pudding, what unpromis'd joy
Expands my heart, to meet thee in Savoy!
Doom'd o'er the world thro' devious paths to roam,
Each clime my country, and each house my home,
My soul is sooth'd, my cares have found an end,
I greet my long-lost, unforgotten friend.
  For thee thro' Paris, that corrupted town,
How long in vain I wandered up and down, [hoard
Where shameless Bacchus, with his drenching
Cold from his cave usurps the morning board.
London is lost in smoke and steep'd in tea;
No Yankey there can lisp the name of thee:
The uncouth word, a libel on the town,
Would call a proclamation from the crown.*
For climes oblique, that fear the sun's full rays,
Chill'd in their fogs, exclude the generous maize;

* A certain king, at the time when this was written, was publishing proclamations to prevent American principles from being propagated in his country.

A grain whose rich luxuriant growth requires
Short gentle showers, and bright etherial fires.
But here tho' distant from our native shore,
With mutual glee we meet and laugh once more,
The same! I know thee by that yellow face,
That strong complexion of true Indian race,
Which time can never change, nor soil impair,
Nor Alpine snows, nor Turkey's morbid air;
For endless years, thro' every mild domain,
Where grows the maize, there thou art sure to reign.
But man, more fickle, the bold licence claims,
In different realms to give thee different names.
Thee the soft nations round the warm Levant
Palanta call, the French of course Polante;
E'en in thy native regions, how I blush
To hear the Pennsylvanians call thee Mush!
On Hudson's banks, while men of Belgic spawn
Insult and eat thee by the name suppawn.
All spurious appellations, void of truth:
I've better known thee from my earliest youth,
Thy name is Hasty-Pudding! thus our sires
Were wont to greet thee fuming from their fires;
And while they argu'd in thy just defence
With logic clear, they thus explained the sense:—
"In haste the boiling cauldron o'er the blaze,
"Receives and cooks the ready-powder'd maize;
"In haste 'tis serv'd, and then in equal haste,
"With cooling milk, we make the sweet repast.
"No carving to be done, no knife to grate
"The tender ear, and wound the stony plate;
"But the smooth spoon, just fitted to the lip,
"And taught with art the yielding mass to dip,
"By frequent journies to the bowl well stor'd,
"Performs the hasty honors of the board."

Such is thy name, significant and clear,
A name, a sound to every Yankey dear,
But most to me, whose heart and palate chaste
Preserve my pure hereditary taste.
There are who strive to stamp with disrepute
The luscious food, because it feeds the brute;
In tropes of high-strain'd wit, while gaudy prigs
Compare thy nursling man to pamper'd pigs;
With sovereign scorn I treat the vulgar jest,
Nor fear to share thy bounties with the beast.
What though the generous cow gives me to quaff
The milk nutritious; am I then a calf?
Or can the genius of the noisy swine,
Tho' nurs'd on pudding, thence lay claim to mine?
Sure the sweet song, I fashion to thy praise,
Runs more melodious than the notes they raise.
My song resounding in its grateful glee,
No merit claims; I praise myself in thee.
My father lov'd thee through his length of days:
For thee his fields were shaded o'er with maize;
From thee what health, what vigour he possest,
Ten sturdy freemen sprung from him attest;
Thy constellation rul'd my natal morn,
And all my bones were made of Indian corn.
Delicious grain! whatever form it take,
To roast or boil, to smother or to bake,
In every dish 'tis welcome still to me,
But most, my Hasty-Pudding, most in thee.
Let the green Succatash with thee contend,
Let beans and corn their sweetest juices blend,
Let butter drench them in its yellow tide,
And a long slice of bacon grace their side;
Not all the plate, how fam'd soe'er it be,
Can please my palate like a bowl of thee.

Some talk of Hoe-cake, fair Virginia's pride,
Rich Johnny-cake this mouth has often tri'd;
Both please me well, their virtues much the same;
Alike their fabric, as allied their fame,
Except in dear New-England, where the last
Receives a dash of pumpkin in the paste,
To give it sweetness and improve the taste.
But place them all before me, smoaking hot,
The big round dumplin rolling from the pot;
The pudding of the bag, whose quivering breast,
With suet lin'd leads on the Yankey feast;
The Charlotte brown, within whose crusty sides
A belly soft the pulpy apple hides;
The yellow bread, whose face like amber glows,
And all of Indian that the bake-pan knows—
You tempt me not--my fav'rite greets my eyes,
To that lov'd bowl my spoon by instinct flies.

CANTO II.

To mix the food by vicious rules of art,
To kill the stomach and to sink the heart,
To make mankind, to social virtue sour,
Cram o'er each dish, and be what they devour;
For this the kitchen Muse first framed her book,
Commanding sweats to stream from every cook;
Children no more their antic gambols tried,
And friends to physic wonder'd why they died.
Not so the Yankey--his abundant feast,
With simples furnished, and with plainness drest,
A numerous offspring gathers round the board,
And cheers alike the servant and the lord; [taste,
Whose well-bought hunger prompts the joyous
And health attends them from the short repast.

While the full pail rewards the milk-maid's toil,
The mother sees the morning cauldron boil;
To stir the pudding next demands their care,
To spread the table and the bowls prepare;
To feed the children, as their portions cool,
And comb their heads, and send them off to school.
Yet may the simplest dish, some rules impart,
For nature scorns not all the aids of art.
E'en Hasty-Pudding, purest of all food,
May still be bad, indifferent, or good,
As sage experience the short process guides,
Or want of skill, or want of care presides.
Whoe'er would form it on the surest plan,
To rear the child and long sustain the man;
To shield the morals while it mends the size,
And all the powers of every food supplies,
Attend the lessons that the Muse shall bring,
Suspend your spoons, and listen while I sing.
But since, O man! thy life and health demand
Not food alone, but labour from thy hand,
First in the field, beneath the sun's strong rays,
Ask of thy mother earth the needful maize;
She loves the race that courts her yielding soil,
And gives her bounties to the sons of toil.
When now the ox, obedient to thy call,
Repays the loan that fill'd the winter stall,
Pursue his traces o'er the furrow'd plain,
And plant in measur'd hills the golden grain.
But when the tender germe begins to shoot,
And the green spire declares the sprouting root,
Then guard your nursling from each greedy foe,
Th' insidious worm, the all-devouring crow.
A little ashes, sprinkled round the spire,
Soon steep'd in rain, will bid the worm retire;

The feather'd robber with his hungry maw
Swift flies the field before your man of straw,
A frightful image, such as school boys bring
When met to burn the Pope, or hang the King.
Thrice in the season, through each verdant row
Wield the strong plough-share and the faithful hoe;
The faithful hoe, a double task that takes,
To till the summer corn, and roast the winter cakes.
Slow springs the blade, while check'd by chilling rains,
Ere yet the sun the seat of Cancer gains;
But when his fiercest fires emblaze the land,
Then start the juices, then the roots expand;
Then, like a column of Corinthian mould,
The stalk struts upward, and the leaves unfold;
The bushy branches all the ridges fill,
Entwine their arms, and kiss from hill to hill.
Here cease to vex them, all your cares are done;
Leave the last labours to the parent sun;
Beneath his genial smiles the well-drest field,
When autumn calls, a plenteous crop shall yield.
Now the strong foliage bears the standards high,
And shoots the tall top-gallants to the sky;
The suckling ears their silky fringes bend,
And pregnant grown, their swelling coats distend;
The loaded stalk, while still the burthen grows,
O'erhangs the space that runs between the rows;
High as a hop-field waves the silent grove,
A safe retreat for little thefts of love,
When the pledg'd roasting-ears invite the maid,
To meet her swain beneath the new-form'd shade;
His generous hand unloads the cumbrous hill,
And the green spoils her ready basket fill;
Small compensation for the two-fold bliss,
The promis'd wedding and the present kiss.

Slight depredations these ; but now the moon
Calls from his hollow tree the sly raccoon ;
And while by night he bears the prize away,
The bolder squirrel labours through the day.
Both thieves alike, but provident of time,
A virtue, rare, that almost hides their crime.
Then let them steal the little stores they can,
And fill their gran'ries from the toils of man ;
We've one advantage where they take no part,--
With all their wiles they ne'er have found the art
To boil the Hasty-Pudding ; here we shine
Superior far to tenants of the pine ;
This envied boon to man shall still belong,
Unshar'd by them in substance or in song.
At last the closing season browns the plain,
And ripe October gathers in the grain ;
Deep loaded carts the spacious corn-house fill,
The sack distended marches to the mill ;
The lab'ring mill beneath the burthen groans,
And show'rs the future pudding from the stones ;
Till the glad house-wife greets the powder'd gold,
And the new crop exterminates the old.

CANTO III.

THE days grow short ; but tho' the falling sun
To the glad swain proclaims his day's work done,
Night's pleasing shades his various task prolong,
And yield new subjects to my various song.
For now, the corn-house fill'd, the harvest home,
Th' invited neighbours to the Husking come ;
A frolic scene, where work, and mirth, and play,
Unite their charms, to chace the hours away.

Where the huge heap lies center'd in the hall,
The lamp suspended from the cheerful wall,
Brown corn-fed nymphs, and strong hard-handed beaux,
Alternate rang'd, extend in circling rows,
Assume their seats, the solid mass attack;
The dry husks rustle, and the corn-cobs crack;
The song, the laugh, alternate notes resound,
And the sweet cider trips in silence round.

The laws of Husking ev'ry wight can tell;
And sure no laws he ever keeps so well:
For each red ear a general kiss he gains,
With each smut ear she smuts the luckless swains;
But when to some sweet maid a prize is cast,
Red as her lips, and taper as her waist,
She walks the round, and culls one favor'd beau,
Who leaps, the luscious tribute to bestow.
Various the sport, as are the wits and brains
Of well pleas'd lasses and contending swains:
Till the vast mound of corn is swept away,
And he that gets the last ear, wins the day.

Meanwhile the house-wife urges all her care,
The well-earn'd feast to hasten and prepare.
The sifted meal already waits her hand,
The milk is strain'd the bowls in order stand,
The fire flames high; and, as a pool (that takes
The headlong stream that o'er the mill-dam breaks)
Foams, roars and rages with incessant toils,
So the vext cauldron rages, roars and boils.

First with clean salt she seasons well the food,
Then strews the flour and thickens all the flood.
Long o'er the simmering fire she lets it stand:
To stir it well demands a stronger hand;
The husband takes his turn; and round and round
The ladle flies; at last the toil is crown'd;

When to the board the thronging huskers pour,
And take their seats as at the corn before.
I leave them to their feast. There still belong
More copious matters to my faithful song.
For rules there are, tho' ne'er unfolded yet,
Nice rules and wise, how pudding should be ate.
Some with molasses line the luscious treat,
And mix, like Bards, the useful with the sweet.
A wholesome dish, and well-deserving praise,
A great resource in those bleak wintry days,
When the chill'd earth lies buried deep in snow,
And raging Boreas drives the shivering cow.
Blest cow! thy praise shall still my notes employ,
Great source of health, the only source of joy;
How oft thy teats these pious hands have prest!
How oft thy bounties prove my only feast!
How oft I've fed thee with my fav'rite grain!
And roar'd, like thee, to find thy children slain!
Ye swains who know her various worth to prize,
Ah! house her well from Winter's angry skies.
Potatoes, Pumpkins, should her sadness cheer,
Corn from your crib, and mashes from your beer;
When Spring returns she'll well acquit the loan,
And nurse at once your infants and her own.
Milk then with pudding I should always chuse;
To this in future I confine my Muse,
Till she in haste some farther hints unfold,
Well for the young, nor useless to the old.
First in your bowl the milk abundant take,
Then drop with care along the silver lake
Your flakes of pudding; these at first will hide
Their little bulk beneath the swelling tide;
But when their growing mass no more can sink,
When the soft island looms above the brink,

Then check your hand: you've got the portion's due,
So taught our sires, and what they taught is true.
There is a choice in spoons. Tho' small appear
The nice distinction, yet to me 'tis clear,
The deep bowl'd Gallic spoon, contriv'd to scoop
In ample draughts the thin diluted soup,
Performs not well in those substantial things,
Whose mass adhesive to the metal clings;
Where the strong labial muscles must embrace,
The gentle curve, and sweep the hollow space.
With ease to enter and discharge the freight,
A bowl less concave but still more dilate,
Becomes the pudding best. The shape, the size,
A secret rests unknown to vulgar eyes.
Experienc'd feeders can alone impart
A rule so much above the lore of art.
These tuneful lips, that thousand spoons have tried,
With just precision could the point decide,
Tho' not in song; the muse but poorly shines
In cones, and cubes, and geometric lines.
Yet the true form, as near as she can tell,
Is that small section of a goose-egg-shell,
Which in two equal portions shall divide
The distance from the centre to the side.
Fear not to slaver; 'tis no deadly sin,
Like the free Frenchman, from your joyous chin
Suspend the ready napkin; or, like me,
Poise with one hand your bowl upon your knee;
Just in the zenith your wise head project,
Your full spoon, rising in a line direct,
Bold as a bucket, heeds no drops that fall,
The wide mouth'd bowl will surely catch them all.

TO

LOUIS THE SIXTEENTH,

KING OF FRANCE AND NAVARRE.

SIRE,

IN recounting the numerous bleſſings which have ariſen to mankind from the diſcovery of America, the mind dwells with particular pleaſure and gratitude upon thoſe Characters, from whoſe hands theſe bleſſings have immediately flowed. That change in the political face of Europe, that liberality of ſentiment, that enlargement of commercial, military and philoſophical knowledge, which contraſt the preſent with the fifteenth century, are but ſo many conſequences of this great event; an event which laid open all parts of the earth to the range of the liberal mind. The illuſtrious line of your royal Anceſtors have been conſpicuous in ſeizing thoſe advantages and diffuſing their happy effects. The great Father of the Houſe of Bourbon will be held in the higheſt veneration, till his favourite political ſyſtem ſhall be realized among the nations of Europe, and extended to all mankind. But it was left to his more glorious Deſcendant, to accelerate the progreſs of ſociety, by diſregarding the temporary intereſts and local policies of other Monarchs, reaching the hand of beneficence to another hemiſphere, and raiſing an infant empire, in a few years, to a degree of importance, which ſeveral ages were ſcarcely thought ſufficient to produce.

This is the ſublime of humanity, to feel for future ages and diſtant nations; to act thoſe things, as a Monarch, which another can only contemplate as a Philoſopher, or image in the flights of poetry. America acknowledges her obligations to the Guardian of her rights; mankind, who ſurvey your conduct, and poſterity, for whom you act, will ſee that the tribute of gratitude is paid.

If to patronize the Arts can add to the praiſe of theſe more glorious actions, your Majeſty's fame in this reſpect will be ever ſacred; as there are none, who can feel the ſubject ſo ſtrongly as thoſe who are the particular objects of your royal condescension.

The following work, which may be considered in part, as the offspring of those reflections which your Majesty's conduct has taught me to make, possesses one advantage scarcely to be expected in a Poem written in a foreign language. Your Majesty's permission, that the unfortunate Columbus may once more enjoy the protection of a royal benefactor, has added a new obligation to those I before felt—in common with a grateful country. It is the policy of wise Princes to encourage the liberal arts among their subjects; and, as the human race are the objects of your extended administration, they may all in some measure claim the privilege of subjects, in seeking your literary as well as political protection.

With the deepest sense of your Majesty's royal munificence to my country, and gracious condescension to myself, I have the honour to be,

Sire,

YOUR MAJESTY's

Most humble and

Most devoted Servant,

Joel Barlow.

INTRODUCTION.

EVERY circumſtance relating to the diſcovery and ſettlement of America, is an intereſting object of enquiry. Yet it is preſumed, from the preſent ſtate of literature in this country, that many perſons, who might be entertained with an American production of this kind, are but ſlightly acquainted with the life and character of that great man, whoſe extraordinary genius led him to the diſcovery of the continent, and whoſe ſingular ſufferings ought to excite the indignation of the world.

THE Spaniſh hiſtorians, who treat of the diſcovery and ſettlement of South-America, are very little known in the United States; and Doctor Robertſon's hiſtory of that country, which, as is uſual in the works of that judicious writer, contains all that is valuable on the ſubject, is not yet reprinted in America, and therefore cannot be ſuppoſed to be in the hands of American readers in general: and perhaps no other writer in the Engliſh language has given a ſufficient account of the life of Columbus to enable them to underſtand many of the neceſſary alluſions in the following Poem.

CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS was born in the republic of Genoa about the year 1447; at a time when the navigation of Europe was ſcarcely extended beyond the limits of the Mediterranean. The mariner's compaſs had been invented and in common uſe for more than a century; yet with the help of this ſure guide, prompted by the moſt ardent ſpirit of diſcovery, and encouraged by the patronage of princes, the mariners of thoſe days rarely ventured from the ſight of land. They acquired great applauſe by ſailing along the coaſt of Africa and diſcovering ſome of the neighbouring iſlands; and after puſhing their reſearches with the greateſt induſtry and perſeverance for more than half a century, the Portugueſe, who were the moſt fortunate and enterpriſing, extended their diſcoveries ſouthward no farther than the equator.

The rich commodities of the Eaſt had for ſeveral ages been brought into Europe by the way of the Red Sea and the Mediterranean; and it had now become the object of the Portugueſe to find a paſſage to India, by ſailing round the ſouthern extremity of Africa and then taking an eaſtern courſe. This great object engaged the general attention of mankind, and drew into the Portugueſe ſervice adventurers from every maritime nation in Europe. Every year added to their experience in navigation and ſeemed to promiſe a reward to their induſtry. The proſpect however of arriving at the Indies was extremely diſtant; fifty years perſeverance in the ſame track, had brought them only to the equator, and it was probable that as many more would elapſe before they could accompliſh their purpoſe. But Columbus, by an uncommon exertion of genius, formed a deſign no leſs aſtoniſhing to the age in which he lived, than beneficial to poſterity. This deſign was to ſail to India by taking a weſtern direction. By the accounts of travellers who had viſited India, that country ſeemed almoſt without limits on the eaſt; and by attending to the ſpherical figure of the earth, Columbus drew this concluſion, that the Atlantic ocean muſt be bounded on the weſt either by India itſelf, or by ſome great continent not far diſtant from it.

This extraordinary man, who was now about twenty-ſeven years of age, appears to have united in his character every trait, and to have poſſeſſed every tallant, requiſite to form and execute the greateſt enterprizes. He was early educated in all the uſeful ſciences that were taught in that day. He had made great proficiency in geography, aſtronomy and drawing, as they were neceſſary to his favourite purſuit of navigation. He had now been a number of years in the ſervice of the Portugueſe, and had acquired all the experience that their voyages and diſcoveries could afford. His courage and perſeverance had been put to the ſevereſt teſt, and the exerciſe of every amiable and heroic virtue rendered him univerſally known and reſpected. He had married a Portugueſe lady by whom he had two ſons, Diego and Fardinand; the younger of whom is the hiſtorian of his life.

Such was the ſituation of Columbus, when he formed and thoroughly digeſted a plan, which, in its operation and conſequences, unfolded to the view of mankind one half of the globe, diffuſed wealth and dignity over the other, and extended commerce and civilization through the whole. To corroborate the theory which he had formed of the exiſtence of a weſtern continent, his deſcerning mind, which always knew the application of every circumſtance that fell in his way, had obſerved ſeveral facts which by others would have paſſed unnoticed. In his voyages to the African iſlands he had found, floating aſhore after a long weſtern ſtorm, pieces of wood carved in a curious manner, canes of a ſize unknown in that quarter of the world, and human bodies with very ſingular features. Fully confirmed in the opinion that a conſiderable portion of the earth was ſtill undiſcovered, his genius was too vigorous and perſevering to ſuffer an idea of this importance to reſt merely in ſpecula-

tion, as it had done in the minds of Plato and Seneca, who appear to have had conjectures of a ſimilar nature. He determined therefore to bring his favourite theory to the teſt of actual experiment. But an object of that magnitude required the patronage of a Prince; and a deſign ſo extraordinary met with all the obſtructions, delays and diſappointments, which an age of ſuperſtition could invent, and which perſonal jealouſy and malice could magnify and encourage. Happily for mankind, in this inſtance, a genius, capable of deviſing the greateſt undertakings, aſſociated in itſelf a degree of patience and enterprize, modeſty and confidence, which rendered him ſuperior, not only to theſe misfortunes, but to all the future calamities of his life. Prompted by the moſt ardent enthuſiaſm to be the diſcoverer of new continents, and fully ſenſible of the advantages that would reſult to mankind from ſuch diſcoveries, he had the mortification to waſte away eighteen years of his life, after his ſyſtem was well eſtabliſhed in his own mind, before he could obtain the means of executing his deſigns. The greateſt part of this period was ſpent in ſucceſſive and fruitleſs ſolicitations, at Genoa, Portugal and Spain. As a duty to his native country, he made his firſt propoſal to the Senate of Genoa; where it was ſoon rejected. Conſcious of the truth of his theory, and of his own abilities to execute his deſign, he retired without dejection from a body of men who were incapable of forming any juſt ideas upon the ſubject; and applied with freſh confidence to John the ſecond, King of Portugal, who had diſtinguiſhed himſelf as the great patron of navigation, and in whoſe ſervice Columbus had acquired a reputation which entitled him and his project to general confidence and approbation. But here he ſuffered an inſult much greater than a direct refuſal. After referring the examination of his ſcheme to the council who had the direction of naval affairs, and drawing from him his general ideas of the length of the voyage and the courſe he meant to take, that great monarch had the meanneſs to conſpire with this council to rob Columbus of the glory and advantage he expected to derive from his undertaking. While Columbus was amuſed with this negotiation, in hopes of having his ſcheme adopted and patronized, a veſſel was ſecretly diſpatched, by order of the king, to make the intended diſcovery. Want of ſkill and perſeverance in the pilot rendered the plot unſucceſsful; and Columbus, on diſcovering the treachery, retired with an ingenuous indignation from a court capable of ſuch duplicity.

HAVING now performed what was due to the country that gave him birth and to the one that had adopted him as a ſubject, he was at liberty to court the patronage of any prince who ſhould have the wiſdom and juſtice to accept his propoſals. He had communicated his ideas to his brother Bartholomew, whom he ſent to England to negotiate with Henry ſeventh; at the ſame time that he went himſelf into Spain to apply in perſon to Fardinand and Iſabella, who governed the united kingdoms of Aragon and Caſtile. The circumſtances of his brother's application in England, which appears to have been unſucceſsful, is not to my purpoſe to relate; and the limits preſcribed to this introduction will prevent the detail of all the particulars relating to his own negociation in Spain. In this negociation Columbus ſpent eight years, in the various agitations of ſuſpence, expectation and diſappointment; till, at length his ſcheme was adopted by Iſabella, who undertook, as Queen of Caſtile, to deſtroy the expences of the expedition; and declared herſelf, ever after, the friend and patron of the hero who projected it.

Columbus, who, during all his ill ſucceſs in the negotiation, never abated any thing of the honours and emoluments which he expected to acquire in the expedition, obtained from Ferdinand and Iſabella a full ſtipulation of every article contained in his firſt propoſals. He was conſtituted high Admiral and Viceroy of all the Seas, Iſlands and Continents which he ſhould diſcover; with power to receive one tenth of the profits ariſing from their productions and commerce. Theſe offices and emoluments were to be hereditary in his family.

These articles being adjuſted, the preparations for the voyage were brought forward with rapidity; but they were by no means adequate to the importance of the expedition. Three ſmall veſſels, ſcarcely ſufficient in ſize to be employed in the coaſting buſineſs, were appointed to traverſe the vaſt Atlantic; and to encounter the ſtorms and currents that might be expected in ſo lengthy a voyage, through diſtant and unknown ſeas. Theſe veſſels, as might be expected in the infancy of navigation, were ill conſtructed, in a poor condition, and manned by ſeamen unaccuſtomed to diſtant voyages. But the tedious length of time which Columbus had ſpent in ſolicitation and ſuſpence, and the proſpect of being able ſoon, to obtain the object of his wiſhes, induced him to overlook what he could not eaſily remedy, and led him to diſregard thoſe circumſtances which would have intimidated any other mind. He accordingly equiped his ſmall ſquadron with as much expedition as poſſible, manned with ninety men and victualled for one year. With theſe, on the 3d of Auguſt 1492, amidſt a vaſt croud of anxious ſpectators, he ſet ſail on an enterprize, which, if we conſider the ill condition of his ſhips, the inexperience of his ſailors, the length and uncertainty of his voyage, and the conſequences that flowed from it, was the moſt daring and important that ever was undertaken. He touched at ſome of the Portugueſe ſettlements in the Canary Iſles; where, although he had had but a few days run, he found his veſſels needed refitting. He ſoon made the neceſſary repairs, and took his departure from the weſtermoſt Iſlands that had hitherto been diſcovered. Here he left the former track of navigation and ſteered his courſe due weſt.

Not many days after he had been at ſea, he began to experience a new ſcene of difficulty. The ſailors now began to contemplate the dangers and uncertain iſſue of a voyage, the nature and length of which was left entirely open to conjecture. Beſides the ficklenes and timidity natural to men unaccuſtomed to the diſcipline of a ſeafaring life, ſeveral circumſtances contributed to inſpire an obſtinate and mutinous diſpoſition, which required the moſt conſummate art as well as fortitude in the admiral to controul. Having been three weeks at ſea, and experienced the uniform courſe of the trade winds, which always blow in a weſtern direction, they contended that, ſhould they continue the ſame courſe for a longer period, the ſame winds would never permit them to return to Spain. The magnetic needle began to vary its direction. This being the firſt time that phenomenon was ever diſcovered, it was viewed by the ſailors with aſtoniſhment, and conſidered as an indication that nature itſelf had changed her courſe, and that Providence was determined to puniſh their audacity, in venturing ſo far beyond the ordinary bounds of man. They declared that the commands of their ſovereign had been fully obeyed, in their proceeding ſo many days in the ſame direction, and ſo far ſurpaſſing the attempts of all former navigators, in queſt of new diſcoveries. Every talent, requiſite for governing, ſoothing and tempering the paſſions of men, is conſpicuous in the conduct of Columbus on this occaſion. The dignity and affability of his manners, his ſurpriſing knowledge and experience in naval affairs, his unwearied and minute attention to the duties of his command gave him a complete aſcendant over the minds of his men, and inſpired that degree of confidence which would have maintained his authority in almoſt any poſſible circumſtances. But here, from the nature of the undertaking, every man had leiſure to feed his imagination with all the gloomineſs and uncertainty of the proſpect. They found, every day, that the ſame ſteady gales carried them with great rapidity from their native country, and indeed from all countries of which they had any knowledge. Notwithſtanding all the variety of management with which Columbus addreſſed himſelf to their paſſions, ſometimes by ſoothing them with the prognoſtics of diſcovering land, ſometimes by flattering their ambition and feaſting their avarice with the glory and wealth they would acquire from diſcovering thoſe rich countries beyond the Atlantic, and ſometimes by threatening them with the diſpleaſure of their ſovereign, ſhould their timidity and diſobedience defeat ſo great an object, their uneaſineſs ſtill increaſed. From ſecret whiſperings, it aroſe to open mutiny and dangerous conſpiracy. At length they determined to rid themſelves of the remonſtrances of Columbus, by throwing him into the ſea. The infection ſpread from ſhip to ſhip, and involved Officers as well as common ſailors. They finally loſt all ſenſe of ſubordination, and addreſſed their commander in an inſolent manner, demanding to be conducted immediately back to Spain; or, they aſſured him, they would ſeek their own ſafety by taking away his life.

Columbus, whoſe ſagacity and penetration had diſcovered every ſymptom of the diſorder, was prepared for this laſt ſtage of it, and was ſufficiently apprized of the danger that awaited him. He found it vain to contend with paſſions he could no longer controul. He therefore propoſed that they ſhould obey his orders for three days longer; and, ſhould they not diſcover land in that time, he would then direct his courſe for Spain. They complied with his propoſal; and, happily for mankind, in three days they diſcovered Land. This was a ſmall Iſland, to which Columbus gave the name of San Salvador. Their firſt interview with the natives was a ſcene of amuſement and compaſſion on the one part, and of aſtoniſhment and adoration on the other. The natives were entirely naked, ſimple and timorous, and they viewed the Spaniards as a ſuperior order of beings, deſcended from the Sun, which, in that Iſland and in moſt parts of America, was worſhiped as a Deity. By this it was eaſy for Columbus to perceive the line of conduct proper to be obſerved toward that ſimple and inoffenſive people. Had his companions and ſucceſſors, of the Spaniſh nation poſſeſſed the wiſdom and humanity of that great diſcoverer, the benevolent mind would feel no ſenſations, of regret, in contemplating the extenſive advantages ariſing to mankind from the diſcovery of America.

In this voyage, Columbus diſcovered the Iſlands of Cuba and Hiſpaniola; on the latter of which, he erected a ſmall fort, and having left a garriſon of thirty-eight men, under the command of an Officer by the name of Arada, he ſet ſail for Spain. Returning acroſs the Atlantic, he was overtaken by a violent ſtorm, which laſted ſeveral days and increaſed to ſuch a degree, as baffled all his naval ſkill and threatened immediate deſtruction. In this ſituation, when all were in a ſtate of deſpair, and it was expected that every ſea would ſwallow up the crazy veſſel, he manifeſted a ſerenity and preſence of mind, perhaps never equalled in caſes of like extremity. He wrote a ſhort account of his voyage and of the diſcoveries he had made, wrapped it in an oiled cloth, encloſed it in a cake of wax, put it into an empty caſk and threw it overboard; in hopes that ſome accident might preſerve a depoſit of ſo much importance to the world.

The ſtorm however abated, and he at length arrived in Spain, after having been driven by ſtreſs of weather into the Port of Liſbon, where he had opportunity in an interview with the King of Portugal, to prove the truth of his ſyſtem by arguments more convincing than thoſe he had before advanced, in the character of an humble and unſucceſsful ſuitor. He was received every where in Spain with Royal honours, his family was ennobled, and his former ſtipulation reſpecting his offices and emoluments was ratified in the moſt ſolemn manner, by Fardinand and Iſabella; while all Europe reſounded his praiſes and reciprocated their joy and congratulations on the diſcovery of a new world.

The immediate conſequence of this was a ſecond voyage; in which Columbus took charge of a ſquadron of ſeventeen Ships of conſiderable burthen. Volunteers of all ranks and conditions ſolicited to be employed in this expedition. He carried over fifteen hundred perſons, together with all the neceſſaries for eſtabliſhing a Colony and extending his diſcoveries. In this voyage he explored moſt of the Weſt-India Iſlands; but, on his arrival at Hiſpaniola, he found the garriſon he had left there had been totally deſtroyed by the natives, and the fort demoliſhed. He however proceeded in the planting of his colony; and, by his prudent and humane conduct towards the natives, he effectually eſtabliſhed the Spaniſh authority in that Iſland. But while he was thus laying the foundation of their future grandeur in South America, ſome diſcontented perſons, who had returned from the colony to Spain, together with his former enemies in that Kingdom, conſpired to accompliſh his ruin.

They repreſented his conduct in ſuch a light at court, as to create uneaſineſs and diſtruſt in the jealous mind of Ferdinand, and made it neceſſary for Columbus again to return to Spain, in order to counteract their machinations, and to obtain ſuch farther ſupplies as were neceſſary to his great political and benevolent purpoſes. On his arriving at court, and ſtating with his uſual dignity and confidence the whole hiſtory of his tranſactions abroad, every thing wore a favourable appearance. He was received with uſual honours, and again ſolicited to take charge of another ſquadron, to carry out farther ſupplies, to purſue his diſcoveries, and in every reſpect to uſe his diſcretion in extending the Spaniſh Empire in the new World. In this third voyage he diſcovered the Continent of America at the mouth of the river Oronoque. He rectified many diſorders in his government of Hiſpaniola which had happened in his abſence; and every thing was going on in a proſperous train, when an event was announced to him, which completed his own ruin, and gave a fatal turn to the Spaniſh policy and conduct in America. This was the arrival of Francis de Bovadilla, with a commiſſion to ſupercede Columbus in his government; and with power to arraign him as a criminal, and to judge of his former adminiſtration.

It ſeems that by this time the enemies of Columbus, deſpairing to complete his overthrow by groundleſs inſinuations of mal-conduct, had taken the more effectual method of exciting the jealouſy of their Sovereigns. From the promiſing ſamples of Gold and other valuable commodities brought from America, they took occaſion to repreſent to the King and Queen, that the prodigious wealth and extent of the countries he had diſcovered would ſoon throw ſuch power into the hands of the Viceroy, that he would trample on the Royal Authority and bid defiance to the Spaniſh power. Theſe arguments were well calculated for the cold and ſuſpicious temper of Fardinand, and they muſt have had ſome effect upon the mind of Iſabella. The conſequence was the appointment of Bavadilla, who had been the inveterate enemy of Columbus, to take the government from his hands. This firſt tyrant of the Spaniſh nation in America began his adminiſtration by ordering Columbus to be put in chains on board a ſhip, and ſending him priſoner to Spain. By relaxing all diſcipline he introduced diſorder and licenciouſneſs throughout the colony. He ſubjected the unhappy natives to a moſt miſerable ſervitude, and apportioned them out in large numbers among his adherents. Under this ſevere treatment periſhed in a ſhort time many thouſands of thoſe innocent people.

Columbus was carried in his fetters to the Spaniſh court, where the King and Queen either feigned or felt a ſufficient regret at the conduct of Bovadilla towards this illuſtrious priſoner. He was not only releaſed from confinement, but treated with all imaginable reſpect. But, although the king endeavoured to expiate the offence by cenſuring and recalling Bovadilla, yet we may judge of his ſincerity from his appointing Nicholas de Ovando, another bitter enemy of Columbus, to ſucceed in the government, and from his ever after refuſing to reinſtate Columbus, or to fulfil any of the conditions on which the diſcoveries were undertaken. After two years ſolicitation for this or ſome other employment, he at length obtained a ſquadron of four ſmall veſſels to attempt new diſcoveries. He now ſet out, with the ardour and enthuſiaſm of a young adventurer, in queſt of what was always his favourite object, a paſſage into the South Sea, by which he might ſail to India. He touched at Hiſpaniola, where Ovando, the governor, refuſed him admittance on ſhore even to take ſhelter during a hurricane, the prognoſtics of which his experience had taught him to diſcern. By putting into a ſmall creek, he rode out the ſtorm, and then bore away for the continent. Several months, in the moſt boiſterous ſeaſon of the year, he ſpent in exploring the coaſt round the gulph of Mexico in hopes of finding the intended navigation to India. At length he was ſhipwrecked, and driven aſhore on the Iſland of Jamaica.

His cup of calamities ſeemed now completely full. He was caſt upon an iſland of ſavages, without proviſions, without any veſſel, and thirty leagues from any Spaniſh ſettlement. But the greateſt providential misfortunes are capable of being imbittered by the inſults of our fellow creatures. A few of his hardy companions generouſly offered, in two Indian canoes, to attempt a voyage to Hiſpaniola, in hopes of obtaining a veſſel for the relief of the unhappy crew. After ſuffering every extremity of danger and hardſhip, they arrived at the Spaniſh colony in ten days. Ovando, through perſonal malice and jealouſy of Columbus, after having detained theſe meſſengers eight months, diſpatched a veſſel to Jamaica, in order to ſpy out the condition of Columbus and his crew; with poſitive inſtructions to the Captain not to afford them any relief. This order was punctually executed. The Captain approached the ſhore, delivered a letter of empty compliment from Ovando to the Admiral, received his anſwer and returned. About four months afterwards a veſſel came to their relief; and Columbus, worn out with fatigues and broken with misfortunes, returned for the laſt time to Spain. Here a new diſtreſs awaited him, which he conſidered as one of the greateſt he had ſuffered, in his whole life. This was the death of Queen Iſabella, his laſt and greateſt friend.

He did not ſuddenly abandon himſelf to deſpair. He called upon the gratitude and juſtice of the King; and, in terms of dignity, demanded the fulfilment of his former contract. Notwithſtanding his age and infirmities, he even ſolicited to be farther employed in extending the career of diſcovery, without a proſpect of any other reward but the conſciouſneſs of doing good to mankind. But Fardinand, cold, ungrateful and timid, dared not to comply with a ſingle propoſal of this kind, leſt he ſhould encreaſe his own obligations to a man, whoſe ſervices he thought it dangerous to reward. He therefore delayed and avoided any deciſion on theſe ſubjects, in hopes that the declining health of Columbus would ſoon rid the court of the remonſtrances of a man, whoſe extraordinary merit was, in their opinion, a ſufficient occaſion of deſtroying him. In this they were not diſappointed. Columbus languiſhed a ſhort time, and gladly reſigned a life, which had been worn out in the moſt eſſential ſervices perhaps that were ever rendered, by any human character, to an ungrateful world.

Sometime in this gloomy interval, before his death, the Viſion is ſuppoſed to have been preſented to him; in order to ſatisfy his benevolent mind, by unfolding to him the importance of his diſcoveries, in their extenſive influence upon the intereſt and happineſs of mankind, in the progreſs of ſociety.

The Author has indulged a ſmall anachroniſm in the opening of the Poem, for the ſake of grouping the misfortunes of the hero; as the time of his actual impriſonment was previous to his laſt voyage and to the death of Iſabella.

The Author, at firſt, formed an idea of attempting a regular Epic Poem, on the diſcovery of America. But on examining the nature of that event, he found that the moſt brilliant ſubjects incident to ſuch a plan would ariſe from the conſequences of the diſcovery, and muſt be repreſented in viſion. Indeed to have made it a patriotic Poem, by extending the ſubject to the ſettlement and revolutions of North America and their probable effect upon the future progreſs of ſociety at large, would have protracted the viſion to ſuch a degree as to render it diſproportionate to the reſt of the work. To avoid an abſurdity of this kind, which he ſuppoſed the critics would not pardon, he rejected the idea of a regular Epic form, and has confined his plan to the train of events which might be repreſented to the hero in viſion. This form he conſiders as the beſt that the nature of the ſubject would admit; and the regularity of the parts will appear by obſerving, that there is a ſingle poetical deſign conſtantly kept in view, which is to gratify and ſooth the deſponding mind of the hero: It being the greateſt poſſible reward of his ſervices, and the only one that his ſituation would permit him to enjoy, to convince him that his labours had not been beſtowed in vain, and that he was the author of ſuch extenſive happineſs to the human race.

THE VISION OF COLUMBUS.

BOOK I.

LONG had the Sage, the firſt who dared to brave
The unknown dangers of the weſtern wave,
Who taught mankind where future empires lay
In theſe fair confines of deſcending day,
With cares o'erwhelm'd, in life's diſtreſſing gloom,
Wiſh'd from a thankleſs world a peaceful tomb;
While kings and nations, envious of his name,
Enjoy'd his toils and triumph'd o'er his fame,
And gave the chief, from promiſed empire hurl'd,
Chains for a crown, a priſon for a world.
Now night and ſilence held their lonely reign,
The half-orb'd moon declining to the main;
Deſcending clouds, o'er varying ether driven,
Obſcured the ſtars and ſhut the eye from heaven;
Cold miſts through opening grates the cell invade,
And deathlike terrors haunt the midnight ſhade;
When from a viſionary, ſhort repoſe,
That raiſed new cares and temper'd keener woes,
Columbus woke, and to the walls addreſs'd
The deep-felt ſorrows of his manly breaſt.

Here lies the purchaſe, here the wretched ſpoil,
Of painful years and perſevering toil:
For theſe dread walks, this hideous haunt of pain,
I traced new regions o'er the pathleſs main,
Dared all the dangers of the dreary wave,
Hung o'er its clefts and topp'd the ſurging grave,
Saw billowy ſeas, in ſwelling mountains roll,
And burſting thunders rock the reddening pole,
Death rear his front in every dreadful form,
Gape from beneath and blacken in the ſtorm;
Till, toſt far onward to the ſkirts of day,
Where milder ſuns diſpens'd a ſmiling ray,
Through brighter ſkies my happier ſails deſcry'd
The golden banks that bound the weſtern tide,
And gave the admiring world that bounteous ſhore
Their wealth to nations and to kings their power.
Oh land of tranſport! dear, deluſive coaſt,
To theſe fond, aged eyes forever loſt!
No more thy gladdening vales I travel o'er,
For me thy mountains rear the head no more,
For me thy rocks no ſparkling gems unfold,
Or ſtreams luxuriant wear their paths in gold;
From realms of promiſed peace forever borne,
I hail dread anguiſh, and in ſecret mourn.
But dangers paſt, fair climes explored in vain,
And foes triumphant ſhew but half my pain.
Diſſembling friends, each earlier joy who gave,
And fired my youth the ſtorms of fate to brave,

Swarm'd in the ſunſhine of my happier days,
Purſued the fortune and partook the praiſe,
Bore in my doubtful cauſe a twofold part,
The garb of friendſhip and the viper's heart,
Paſs my loath'd cell with ſmiles of ſour diſdain,
Inſult my woes and triumph in my pain.
One gentle guardian Heaven indulgent gave,
And now that guardian ſlumbers in the grave.
Hear from above, thou dear departed ſhade,
As once my joys, my preſent ſorrows aid,
Burſt my full heart, afford that laſt relief,
Breathe back my ſighs and reinſpire my grief;
Still in my ſight thy royal form appears,
Reproves my ſilence and demands my tears.
On that bleſt hour my ſoul delights to dwell,
When thy protection bade the canvaſs ſwell,
When kings and courtiers found their factions vain,
Blind Superſtition ſhrunk beneath her chain,
The ſun's glad beam led on the circling way,
And iſles roſe beauteous in the weſtern day.
But o'er thoſe ſilvery ſhores, that fair domain,
What crouds of tyrants fix their horrid reign!
Again fair Freedom ſeeks her kindred ſkies,
Truth leaves the world, and Iſabella dies.
Oh, lend thy friendly ſhroud to veil my ſight,
That theſe pain'd eyes may dread no more the light,
Theſe welcome ſhades conclude my inſtant doom,
And this drear manſion moulder to a tomb.

Thus mourn'd the hapleſs chief; a thundering ſound
Roll'd round the ſhuddering walls and ſhook the ground;
O'er all the dome, where ſolemn arches bend,
The rooſs unfold and ſtreams of light deſcend;
The growing ſplendor fill'd the aſtoniſh'd room,
And gales etherial breathed a glad perfume;
Mild in the midſt a radiant ſeraph ſhone,
Robed in the veſtments of the riſing ſun;
Tall roſe his ſtature, youth's primeval grace
Moved o'er his limbs and wanton'd in his face,
His cloſing wings, in golden plumage dreſt,
With gentle ſweep came folding o'er his breaſt,
His locks in rolling ringlets glittering hung,
And ſounds melodious moved his heavenly tongue.

Riſe, trembling Chief, to ſcenes of rapture, riſe,
This voice awaits thee from the approving ſkies;
Thy juſt complaints, in heavenly audience known
Call mild compaſſion from the indulgent throne;
Let grief no more awake the piteous ſtrain,
Nor think thy piety or toils are vain.
Tho' faithleſs men thy injured worth deſpiſe,
Depreſs all virtue and inſult the ſkies,
Yet look thro' nature, Heaven's own conduct trace,
What power divine ſuſtains the unthankful race!
From that great Source, that life-inſpiring Soul,
Suns drew their light and ſyſtems learn'd to roll,
Time walk'd the ſilent round, and life began,
And God's fair image ſtamp'd the mind of man.

Down the long vale, where rolling years deſcend,
To thy own days, behold his care extend;
From one eternal Spring, what love proceeds!
Smiles in the ſeraph, in the Saviour bleeds,
Shines through all worlds, that fill the bounds of ſpace,
And lives and brightens in thy favour'd race.
Yet no return the almighty Power can know,
From earth to heaven no juſt reward can flow,
Men ſpread their wants, the all-bounteous hand ſup-
And gives the joys that mortals dare deſpiſe. [plies,
In theſe dark vales where blinded faction ſways,
Wealth pride and conqueſt claim the palm of praiſe,
Aw'd into ſlaves, while groping millions groan,
And blood-ſtain'd ſteps lead upwards to a throne.
Far other wreaths thy virtuous temples claim,
Far nobler honours build thy ſacred name,
Thine be the joys the immortal mind that grace
Pleas'd with the toils, that bleſs thy kindred race,
Now raiſe thy raviſh'd ſoul to ſcenes more bright,
The glorious fruits aſcending on thy ſight;
For, wing'd with ſpeed, from brighter worlds I came,
To ſooth thy grief and ſhow thy diſtant fame.
As that great Seer, whoſe animating rod
Taught Iſrael's ſons the wonder-working God,
Who led, thro' dreary waſtes, the murmuring band
To the fair confines of the promiſed land,
Oppreſs'd with years, from Piſgah's beauteous height,
O'er boundleſs regions caſt the raptured ſight;

The joys of unborn nations warm'd his breaſt,
Repaid his toils and ſooth'd his ſoul to reſt;
Thus, o'er thy ſubject wave, ſhalt thou behold
Far happier realms their future charms unfold,
In nobler pomp another Piſgah riſe,
Beneath whoſe foot thine own Canäan lies;
There, rapt in viſion, hail the diſtant clime,
And taſte the bleſſings of remoteſt time.

The Seraph ſpoke; and now before them lay
(The doors unbarr'd) a ſteep aſcending way,
That, through diſparting ſhades, aroſe on high,
Reach'd o'er the hills and lengthen'd up the ſky,
Oped a fair ſummit, graced with riſing flowers,
Sweet odours breathing through celeſtial bowers,
O'er proud Hiſpanian ſpires, it looks ſublime,
Subjects the Alps and levels all the clime.
Led by the Power, the hero gain'd the height,
A touch from heaven ſublimed his mortal ſight,
And, calm beneath them, flow'd the weſtern main,
Far ſtretch'd, immenſe, a ſky-encircled plain;
No ſail, no iſle, no cloud inveſts the bound,
Nor billowy ſurge diſturbs the unvaried round;
Till, deep in diſtant heavens, the ſun's dim ray
Topp'd unknown cliffs and call'd them up to day;
Slow glimmering into ſight wide regions drew,
And roſe and brighten'd on the expanding view;
Fair ſweep the waves, the leſſening ocean ſmiles,
And breathes the fragrance of a thouſand iſles;

Near and more near the long-drawn coaſts ariſe,
Bays ſtretch their arms and mountains lift the ſkies,
The lakes, unfolding, point the ſtreams their way,
The plains the hills their lengthening ſkirts diſplay,
The vales draw forth, high walk the approaching groves,
And all the majeſty of nature moves.

O'er the wild climes his eyes delighted rove,
Where lands extend and glittering waters move;
He ſaw through central realms, the winding ſhore
Spread the deep gulph, his ſail had traced before,
The rocky iſthmus meet the raging tide,
Join diſtant lands and neighbouring ſeas divide,
On either ſide the ſhores unbounded bend,
Puſh wide their waves and to the poles aſcend;
While two fair continents united riſe,
Broad as the main and lengthen'd with the ſkies.

Such views around them ſpread, when thus the Guide,
Here bounteous earth diſplays her nobleſt pride,
Ages unborn ſhall bleſs the happy day,
When thy bold ſtreamers ſteer'd the trackleſs way,
O'er theſe delightful realms thy ſons ſhall tread,
And following millions trace the path you led.
Behold yon iſles, where firſt the flag, unfurl'd,
Waved peaceful triumph o'er the newfound world,
Where, aw'd to ſilence, ſavage bands gave place,
And hail'd with joy the ſun-deſcended race.

See there the banks that pureſt waters lave,
Swift Oronoque rolls back the ocean's wave,

The well known current cleaves the lofty coaſt,
Where Paria's walks thy former footſteps boaſt.
Theſe ſcanty ſhores no more thy joys ſhall bound,
See nobler proſpects lead their ſwelling round,
Nature's ſublimeſt ſcenes before thee roll,
And years and empires open on thy ſoul.
High to yon ſeats exalt thy roving view,
Where Quito's lofty plains o'erlook Peru,
On whoſe broad baſe, like clouds together driven,
A world exalted props the ſkirts of heaven.
From ſouth to north what long, blue fronts ariſe!
Ridge over ridge, and loſt in ambient ſkies!
Approaching near, they heave expanding bounds,
The yielding concave bends ſublimer rounds,
Earth's loftieſt towers there lift the daring height,
And all the Andes fill the bounded ſight.

Round the low baſe what ſloping breaches bend!
Hills form on hills and trees o'er trees extend,
Aſcending, whitening, how the craggs are loſt!
O'erwhelm'd with ſummits of eternal froſt;
Broad fields of ice give back the morning ray,
Like walls of ſuns or heaven's perennial day.

There folding ſtorms on eaſtern pinions ride,
Veil the black heavens and wrap the mountain's ſide,
The thunders rake the craggs, the rains deſcend,
And the long lightnings o'er the vallies bend,
While blaſts unburden'd ſweep the cliffs of ſnow,
The whirlwinds wheel above, the floods convolve below.

There molten rocks, exploſive rend their tomb,
And dread volcanoes ope the nations' doom,
Wild o'er the regions pour the floods of fire,
The ſhores heave backward and the ſeas retire.
There ſlumbering vengeance waits the Almighty call,
Long ages hence to ſhake ſome guilty wall;
Thy pride, O Lima, ſwells the ſulph'rous wave,
And fanes and prieſts and idols croud thy grave.
But ceaſe, my ſon, theſe dread events to trace,
Nor learn the woes that wait thy kindred race.
Beyond thoſe glimmering hills, in lands unknown,
O'er the wide gulph, beyond the flaming zone,
Thro' milder climes, ſee gentler mountains riſe,
Where yon dim regions bound the northern ſkies.
Back from the ſhore aſcending champaigns run,
And lift their heights to hail the eaſtern ſun,
Through all the midland realm, to yon blue pole,
The green hills lengthen and the rivers roll.
So ſpoke the bleſt Immortal; when, more near,
The northern climes in various pomp appear;
Lands yet unknown, and ſtreams without a name
Riſe into viſion and demand their fame.
As when ſome ſaint, in heaven's ſublime abode,
Extends his views o'er all the works of God;
While earth's fair circuit in his preſence rolls,
Here glows the centre and there point the poles;
O'er land and ſea his eyes ſublimely rove,
And joys of mortals kindle heaven with love;

With equal glance the great Obſerver's ſight
Ranged the low vale or climb'd the cloudly height,
As, led by heaven's own light, his raptured mind,
Explored the realms that here await mankind.
Now the ſtill morn had tinged the mountain's brow
And riſing radiance warm'd the plains below;
Stretch'd o'er Virginian hills, in long array,
The beauteous Alleganies met the day.
From ſultry Mobile's rich Floridian ſhore,
To where Ontario bids hoarſe Laurence roar,
O'er the clear mountain-tops and winding ſtreams,
Roſe a pure azure, ſtreak'd with orient beams;
Fair ſpread the ſcene, the hero gazed ſublime,
And thus in proſpect hail'd the happy clime.
Bleſt ſhores of fame, conceal'd in earlier days
To lure my ſteps to trace the untempted ſeas!
And bleſt the race my guardian Saint ſhall lead,
Where theſe tall foreſts wave the beckoning head.
Thro' each wide ridge what various treaſures ſhine!
Sleep there ye diamonds, and ye ores refine,
Exalt your heads ye oaks, ye pines aſcend,
Till future navies bid your branches bend,
Then ſpread the canvaſs o'er the ſubject ſea,
Explore new worlds and teach the old your ſway.
He ſaid, and northward caſt his wondering eyes,
Where other cliffs, in other climes, ariſe,
Where bleak Acadia ſpreads the dangerous coaſt,
And iſles and ſhoals their latent horrors boaſt,

High in the diſtant heaven, the hoary height
Heaves the glad ſailor an eternal light.
Nor could thoſe hills, unnoticed, raiſe their head,
That look ſublime o'er Hudſon's winding bed;
Tho' no bold fiction rear them to the ſkies,
And neighbouring ſummits far ſuperior riſe,
Yet the blue Kaatſkill, where the ſtorms divide,
Would lift the heavens from Atlas' labouring pride.
Awhile the ridgy heights his notice claim,
And hills unnumber'd roſe without a name,
Which placed, in pomp, on any eaſtern ſhore,
Taurus would ſhrink, the Alps be ſung no more;
For here great nature, more exalted ſhow'd
The laſt aſcending footſteps of her God.
He ſaw thoſe mountains ope their watery ſtore,
Floods leave their caves and ſeek the diſtant ſhore,
Down the long hills and through the ſubject plain,
Roll the delightful currents to the main; [ſtrand,
Whoſe numerous channels cleave the lengthening
And heave their banks where future towns muſt ſtand;
He ſtretch'd his eager glance from pole to pole,
Traced all their ſources and explored the whole.
Firſt, from the dreadful Andes' opening ſide,
He ſaw Maranon lead his ſovereign tide.
A thouſand hills for him diſſolve their ſnow,
A thouſand ſtreams obedient bend below,
From diſtant lands their devious courſes wind,
Sweep beds of ore and leave their gold behind,

In headlong cataracts indignant heave, [wave.
Ruſh to his opening banks and ſwell the ſweeping
Ucayla, chief of all his mighty ſons,
From Cuſco's bounds a lengthening circuit runs;
Yutay moves gently in a ſhorter courſe,
And rapid Yatva pours a gathering force;
Far in a wild, by nameleſs tributes fed,
The ſilent Chavar wears a lonely bed;
Aloft, where northern Quito ſits on high,
The roaring Napo quits his miſty ſky,
Down the long ſteeps, in whitening torrents driven,
Like Nile deſcending from his fabled heaven.
While other waves and lakes unknown to fame,
Diſcharge their urns and fill the ſwelling ſtream,
That, far, from clime to clime, majeſtic goes,
Enlarging widening deepening as it flows;
Approaching ocean hears the diſtant roar,
Moves up the bed, nor finds the expected ſhore;
His freſhening waves, with high and hoary tide,
Whelm back the flood, and iſles and champaigns hide,
Till mingling waters lead the downward ſweep,
And waves and trees and banks roll whirling to the
Now, where the ſun in milder glory beams, [deep.
Brazilia's hills pour down their ſpreading ſtreams,
The ſmiling lakes their opening ſides diſplay,
And winding vales prolong the devious way;
He ſaw Xaraya's diamond banks unfold,
And Paraguay's deep channel paved with gold,

Saw proud Potoſi lift his glittering head,
Whence the clear Plata wears his tinctur'd bed;
Rich with the ſpoils of many a diſtant mine,
In one broad ſilver ſea their floods combine;
Wide o'er the realms its annual bounties ſpread,
By nameleſs ſtreams from various mountains fed;
The thirſty regions wait its glad return,
And drink their future harveſts from its urn.

Round the cold climes, beneath the ſouthern ſky,
Thy path, Magellan, caught the hero's eye;
The long cleft ridges oped the widening way
Fair gleaming weſtward to the Placid Sea.
Soon as the diſtant wave was ſeen to roll,
His ancient wiſhes* fill'd his riſing ſoul,
Warm from his heaving heart an anxious ſigh
Breathed o'er his lips; he turn'd his moiſten'd eye,
And thus beſought the Angel. Speak, my guide,
Where leads the paſs? and whence yon purple tide?
Deep in the blue horizon, widely ſpread,
What liquid realms in blending ether fade!
How the dim waters ſkirt the bounds of day!
No lands behind them riſe, no ſtreamers in them play.
In thoſe low ſkies extends the boundleſs main,
I fought ſo long, and ſought, alas, in vain.

* The great object of Columbus in moſt of his voyages was to diſcover a weſtern paſſage to India. For this purpoſe he navigated the gulph of Mexico, with great care, and was much diſappointed in not finding a paſs into the South Sea. The view he is here ſuppoſed to have of that ocean would therefore naturally recall his former deſire of ſailing round the world.

Reſtore, celeſtial Power, my youthful morn,
Call back my years and bid my fame return;
Grant me to trace, beyond that pathleſs ſea,
Some happier ſhore from luſt of empire free;
In that far world to fix a peaceful bower,
From envy ſafe, and curſt Ovando's power.
Since joys of mortals claim thy guardian care,
Oh bleſs the nations and regard my prayer:
There reſt forever kingdoms unexplored,
A God creating, and no God adored.
Earth's happieſt realms ſhall endleſs darkneſs hide?
And ſeas forever roll their uſeleſs tide?
Grant, heavenly guide, the welcome taſk to dare,
One venturous bark, and be my life thy care.
The hero ſpoke; the Seraph mild replies,
While warm compaſſion ſoften'd in his eyes;
Though ſtill to virtuous deeds thy mind aſpires,
And heavenly viſions kindle new deſires;
Yet hear with reverence what attends thy ſtate,
Nor paſs the confines of eternal fate.
Led by this ſacred light thy ſoul ſhall ſee,
That half mankind ſhall owe their bliſs to thee,
And joyous empires claim their future birth,
In theſe fair bounds of ſea-encircled earth;
While unborn times, by thine example preſt,
Shall call forth heroes to explore the reſt.
Beyond thoſe ſeas, the well-known climes ariſe,
Where morning ſplendors gild the eaſtern ſkies.

The circling courſe to India's happy ſhores,
Round Afric's coaſt, bold Gama now explores;
Another paſs theſe opening ſtraits provide,
Nor long ſhall reſt the daring ſearch untry'd;
This watery glade ſhall open ſoon to fame,
Here a loſt hero fix his laſting name,
From that new main in furious waves be toſt,
And fall neglected on the barbarous coaſt.
But ſee the chief from Albion's ſtrand ariſe,
Speed in his pinions, fame before his eyes;
Hither, O Drake, diſplay the haſtening ſails,
Widen ye paſſes, and awake ye gales,
Move thou before him, heaven-revolving ſun,
Wind his long courſe, and teach him where to run,
Earth's diſtant ſhores in circling bands unite,
Lands, learn your fame, and oceans, roll in light,
Round all the beauteous globe his flag be hurl'd,
A new Columbus to the aſtoniſh'd world.
He ſpoke; and ſilent tow'rd the northern ſky,
Wide o'er the realms the hero caſt his eye;
Saw the long floods pour forth their watery ſtores,
And wind their currents to the opening ſhores;
While midland ſeas and lonely lakes diſplay
Their glittering glories to the beams of day.
Thy capes, Virginia, towering from the tide,
Raiſed up their arms and branch'd their borders wide;
Whoſe broad embrace in circling extent lay,
Round the calm boſom of thy beauteous bay.

Where commerce ſince has wing'd her channel'd flight
Each ſpreading ſtream lay brightening to the light;
York led his wave, imbank'd in mazy pride,
And nobler James fell winding by his ſide;
Back tow'rd the diſtant hills, through many a vale,
Wild Rappahanock ſeem'd to lure the ſail,
While, far o'er all, in ſea-like azure ſpread,
The great Potowmac ſwept his lordly bed.
When thus he ſaw the mingling waters play,
And ſeas, in loſt diſorder, idly ſtray,
Where frowning foreſts ſtretch the duſky wing,
And deadly damps forbid the flowers to ſpring,
No ſeaſons clothe the field with beauteous grain,
No buoyant ſhip attempt the uſeleſs main,
With fond impatience, Heavenly Seer, he cry'd,
When ſhall my children croſs the lonely tide?
Here, here, my ſons, the hand of culture bring,
Here teach the lawns to ſmile, the groves to ſing;
Ye ſacred floods, no longer vainly glide,
Ye harveſts, load them, and ye foreſts, ride,
Bear the deep burden from the joyous ſwain,
And tell the world where peace and plenty reign.
Now round the coaſt, where other floods invite,
He fondly turn'd; they fill'd his eager ſight:
Here Del'ware's waves the yielding ſhores invade,
And here bold Hudſon oped a glaſſy glade;
Thy parent ſtream, fair Hartford, met his eye,
Far leſſening upward to the northern ſky;

No watery gleams thro' happier valleys ſhine,
Nor drinks the ſea a lovlier wave than thine.
Bright Charles and Myſtick laved their bloomy iſles,
And gay Piſcatuway caught his paſſing ſmiles;
Swift Kenebeck, deſcending from on high,
Swept the tall hills and lengthen'd down the ſky;
When hoarſe reſounding through the gaping ſhore,
He heard cold Laurence' dreadful ſurges roar.
Tho' ſoftening May had waked the vernal blade,
And happier climes her fragrant garb diſplay'd,
Yet howling winter, in this bleak domain,
Shook the wide waſte and held his gloomy reign;
Still groans the flood, in frozen fetters bound,
And iſles of ice his threatening front ſurround,
Clothed in white majeſty, the foaming main
Leads up the tide and tempts the wintery chain,
Billows on billows lift the maddening brine,
And ſeas and clouds in battling conflict join,
The daſh'd wave ſtruggling heaves in ſwelling ſweep,
Wide craſh the portals of the frozen deep,
Till forced aloft, high-bounding in the air,
Moves the blear ice and ſheds a hideous glare,
The torn foundations on the ſurface ride,
And wrecks of winter load the downward tide.
When now the ſtream had oped its northern courſe,
He traced the current to its milder ſource;
There, far retired, the Angellic Power diſplays
Earth's ſweeteſt charms, her own imboſom'd ſeas.

Ontario's banks, fair opening on the north,
With ſweep majeſtic, pour'd his Laurence forth;
Above, bold Erie's wave ſublimely ſtood,
Look'd o'er the cliff and heaved the headlong flood,
Far circling in the north, great Huron ſpread,
And Michigan o'erwhelm'd a weſtern bed;
While, ſtretch'd in circling majeſty away,
The deep Superior cloſed the ſetting day.
Here all the midland ſeas their waves unite,
And gleam in grandeur to the hero's ſight;
Wide opening round them lands delightful ſpread,
Deep groves innumerous caſt a ſolemn ſhade;
Slow moved the ſettling miſt in lurid ſtreams,
And duſky radiance brown'd the glimmering beams;
O'er all the great Diſcoverer wondering ſtood,
And thus addreſs'd the meſſenger of good.
What lonely walks, what wonderous wilds are theſe?
What branching vales run ſmiling to their ſeas?
The peaceful ſeats, reſerved by Heaven to grace,
The virtuous toils of ſome illuſtrious race.
But why theſe regions form'd ſo fair in vain?
And why ſo diſtant rolls the unconſcious main?
Theſe deſert fountains muſt forever reſt,
Of man unſeen, by native beaſts poſſeſt;
For, ſee, no ſhip can point the ſtreamer here,
No opening paſs, no ſpreading ocean near;
Eternal winter clothes the ſhelvy ſhores,
Where yon far northern *ſon of ocean roars;

* St. Laurence.

Or ſhould ſome bark the daring entrance brave,
And climes by culture warm his leſſening wave,
Yon frightful cataract exalts the brow,
And frowns defiance to the world below.
To whom the Seraph. Here extended lies
The happieſt realm that feels the foſtering ſkies;
Led by this arm thy ſons ſhall hither come,
And ſtreams obedient yield the heroes room;
Nor think no paſs can find the diſtant main,
Or heaven's laſt poliſh touch'd theſe climes in vain.
Behold, from yon fair lake, the current led,
And ſilent waves adorn its infant head;
Far ſouth thro' happy regions ſee it wind,
By gathering floods and nobler fountains join'd,
Yon opening gulph receive the beauteous wave,
And thy known iſles its freſhening current lave;
There lies the path ſome future ſhip ſhall trace,
And waft to theſe wide vales thy kindred race.
The hero ſaw the blooming iſles aſcend
And round the gulph the circling ſhore extend,
He ſaw fair Miſſiſippi wind his way,
Through all the weſtern boundleſs tracts of day;
Where Alleganies ſtretch the morning ſhade,
From lone Oſwago to the gulphy glade,
Where abſent ſuns their midnight circles ride,
Pours the long current of his ruſhing tide.
Unnumber'd branches from the channel ſtray,
Akanſa here, and there Miſſouri lay,

Rouge roll'd his wave along the weſtern wild,
And broad Ohio's northern beauties ſmiled.
Retiring far round Hudſon's frozen bay,
Where leſſening circles ſhrink beyond the day,
The ſhivering ſhrubs ſcarce brave the diſmal clime,
Snows ever-riſing with the years of time;
The beaſts all whitening roam the lifeleſs plain,
And caves unfrequent ſcoop the couch for man.
Where Spring's coy ſteps, in cold Canadia, ſtray,
And joyleſs ſeaſons hold unequal ſway,
He ſaw the pine its daring mantle rear,
Break the rude blaſt and mock the inclement year,
Secure the limits of the angry ſkies,
And bid all ſouthern vegetation riſe.
Wild o'er the vaſt, impenetrable round,
The untrod bowers of ſhadowy nature frown'd;
The neighbouring cedar waved its honours wide,
The fir's tall boughs, the oak's reſiſtleſs pride,
The branching beach, the aſpin's trembling ſhade,
Veil'd the dim heavens and brown'd the duſky glade.
Here in huge crouds thoſe ſturdy ſons of earth,
In froſty regions, claim a nobler birth;
Where heavy trunks the ſheltering dome requires,
And copious fuel feeds the wintery fires.
While warmer ſuns, that ſouthern climes emblaze,
A cool deep umbrage o'er the woodland raiſe;
Floridia's blooming ſhores around him ſpread,
And Georgian hills erect their ſhady head;

Beneath tall trees, in livelier verdure gay,
Long level walks a humble garb diſplay;
The infant corn, unconſcious of its worth,
Points the green ſpire and bends the foliage forth;
Sweeten'd on flowery banks, the paſſing air
Breathes all the untaſted fragrance of the year;
Unbidden harveſts o'er the regions riſe,
And blooming life repays the genial ſkies.
Where circling ſhores around the gulph extend,
The bounteous groves with richer burdens bend;
Spontaneous fruits the uplifted palms unfold,
The beauteous orange waves a load of gold,
The untaught vine, the wildly-wanton cane
Bloom on the waſte, and clothe the enarbour'd plain,
The rich pimento ſcents the neighbouring ſkies,
And woolly cluſters o'er the cotton riſe.
Here, in one view, the ſame glad branches bring
The fruits of autumn and the flowers of ſpring;
No wintery blaſts the unchanging year deform,
Nor beaſts unſhelter'd fear the pinching ſtorm;
But vernal breezes o'er the bloſſoms rove,
And breathe the ripen'd juices thro' the grove.
Beneath the cryſtal wave's inconſtant light,
Pearls undiſtinguiſh'd ſparkle on the ſight;
From opening earth, in living luſtre, ſhine
The various treaſures of the blazing mine;
Hills, cleft before him, all their ſtores unfold,
The quick mercurius and the burning gold;

Gems of unnumber'd hues, in bright array,
Illume the changing rocks and ſhed the beams of day.
When now the Chief had travel'd with his eye,
O'er each fair clime that meets the incumbent ſky;
The ſtream, the mountain, foreſt, vale and plain,
And iſle and coaſt, and wide untravers'd main;
He caſt, o'er all, the immeaſurable glance,
And all paſt views in one broad viſion dance.
Skirting the weſtern heavens and each far pole,
With blending ſkies Pacific oceans roll,
Atlantic ſurges lead their ſwelling round,
And diſtant ſtraits the polar confines bound.
The weſtern coaſts their long, high ſummits heave,
And look majeſtic o'er the ſubject wave;
While, on the lowly eaſt, the winding ſtrand
Draws from the ſilent ſea and gently ſteals to land.

VISION OF COLUMBUS.

BOOK II.

ARGUMENT.

Natives of America appear in viſion. Their manners and characters. Columbus enquires the cauſe of the diſſimilarity of nations. The Angel replies—That the human body is compoſed of a due proportion of the elements ſuited to the place of its firſt creation—that theſe elements, differently proportioned, produce all the changes of health, ſickneſs, growth and decay; and will likewiſe produce any other changes which occaſion the diverſity of men—that theſe elemental proportions are varied, not more by climate, than temperature, and many other local accidents—that the mind is likewiſe in a ſtate of change, and will take its phyſical character from the body and from external objects: examples. Enquiry and anſwer concerning the firſt peopling of America. View of Mexico. Its deſtruction by Cortez. View of Cuſco and Quito, cities of Peru. Tradition of Capac and Oella, founders of the Peruvian empire. Columbus enquires their real hiſtory. The Angel gives an account of their origin, and relates the ſtratagems they uſed in eſtabliſhing that empire.

THE VISION OF COLUMBUS.

BOOK II.

HIGH o'er the changing ſcene, as thus he gazed,
The indulgent Power his arm ſublimely raiſed;
When round the realms ſuperior luſtre flew,
And call'd new wonders to the hero's view.
He ſaw, at once, as far as eye could rove,
Like ſcattering herds, the ſwarthy people move,
In tribes innumerable; all the waſte,
Beneath their ſteps, a varying ſhadow caſt.
As airy ſhapes, beneath the moon's pale eye,
When broken clouds ſail o'er the curtain'd ſky,
Spread thro' the grove and flit along the glade,
And caſt their griſly phantoms thro' the ſhade;
So move the hordes, in thickets half conceal'd,
Or vagrant ſtalking o'er the open field.
Here ever-reſtleſs tribes, deſpiſing home,
O'er ſhadowy ſtreams and trackleſs deſerts roam;
While others there, thro' downs and hamlets ſtray,
And riſing domes a happier ſtate diſplay.
The painted chiefs, in death's grim terrors dreſt,
Riſe fierce to war, and beat the ſavage breaſt;

Dark round their ſteps collecting warriors pour,
And dire revenge begins the hideous roar;
While to the realms around the ſignal flies,
And tribes on tribes, in dread diſorder, riſe,
Track the mute foe and ſcour the diſtant wood,
Wide as a ſtorm, and dreadful as a flood;
Now deep in groves the ſilent ambuſh lay,
Or wing the flight or ſweep the prize away,
Unconſcious babes and reverend ſires devour,
Drink the warm blood and paint their cheeks with gore.
While all their mazy movements fill the view.
Where'er they turn his eager eyes purſue;
He ſaw the ſame dire viſage thro' the whole,
And mark'd the ſame fierce ſavageneſs of ſoul:
In doubt he ſtood, with anxious thoughts oppreſs'd,
And thus his wavering mind the Power addreſs'd.
Say, from what ſource, O Voice of wiſdom, ſprung
The countleſs tribes of this amazing throng?
Where human frames and brutal ſouls combine,
No force can tame them and no arts refine.
Can theſe be faſhion'd on the ſocial plan?
Or boaſt a lineage with the race of man?
In yon fair iſle, when firſt my wandering view
Ranged the glad coaſt and met the ſavage crew;
A timorous herd, like harmleſs roes, they ran,
Hail'd us as Gods from whom their race began,
Supply'd our various wants, relieved our toil,
And oped the unbounded treaſures of their iſle.

But when, their fears allay'd, in us they trace
The well-known image of a mortal race;
When Spaniſh blood their wondering eyes beheld,
Returning rage their changing boſoms ſwell'd;
Their jaws the crimſon dainty long'd to taſte,
And ſpread, with foreign fleſh, the rich repaſt.
My homeward ſail, far diſtant on the main,
Incautious left a ſmall unguarded train,
When, in their horrid power, bereft of aid,
That train with thee, O loſt Arada, bled.
No faith no treaty calms their maddening flame,
Rage all their joy, and ſlaughter all their aim;
How the dread ſavage bands with fury burn'd,
When o'er the wave our growing hoſt return'd!
Now, mild with joy, a friendly ſmile they ſhow'd,
And now their dark-red viſage frown'd in blood;
Till, call'd afar, from all the circling ſhore,
Swift thro' the groves the yelling ſquadrons pour,
The wide wings ſtretching ſweep the unbounded plain,
That groans beneath the innumerable train.
Our ſcanty files, aſcending o'er the ſtrand,
Tread the bold champaign and the fight demand;
With ſteeds and hounds the dreadful onſet moves,
And thundering batteries rend the diſtant groves;
Swift fly the ſcattering foes, like ſhades of night,
When orient ſplendors urge their rapid flight.
Our proffer'd friendſhip bade the diſcord ceaſe,
Spared the grim hoſt and gave the terms of peace.

The arts of civil life we ſtrove to lend,
Their lands to culture and their joys extend,
Sublime their views, fair virtue's charms diſplay,
And point their paſſage to eternal day.
Still proud to rove, our offers they diſdain,
Inſult our friendſhip and our rites prophane.
In that bleſt iſland, ſtill the myriads reſt,
Baſk in the ſunſhine, wander with the beaſt,
Feed on the foe, or from the victor fly,
Riſe into life, exhauſt their rage, and die.
Tell then, my Seer, from what dire ſons of earth
The brutal people drew their ancient birth?
Whether in realms, the weſtern heavens that cloſe,
A tribe diſtinct from other nations roſe,
Born to ſubjection; when, in happier time,
A nobler race ſhould hail their fruitful clime.
Or, if a common ſource all nations claim,
Their lineage, form, and reaſoning powers the ſame,
What ſovereign cauſe, in ſecret wiſdom laid,
This wonderous change in God's own work has made?
Why various powers of ſoul and tints of face
In different climes diverſify the race?
To whom the Guide; Unnumber'd cauſes lie
In earth and ſea and round the varying ſky,
That fire the ſoul, or damp the genial flame,
And work their wonders on the human frame.
See beauty, form and colour change with place—
Here charms of health the blooming viſage grace;

There pale diſeaſes float in every wind,
Deform the figure, and degrade the mind.
From earth's own elements, thy race at firſt
Roſe into life, the children of the duſt;
Theſe kindred elements, by various uſe,
Nouriſh the growth and every change produce;
Pervade the pores, awake the infant bloom,
Lead life along, and ope the certain tomb;
In each aſcending ſtage the man ſuſtain,
His breath, his food, his phyſic and his bane.
In due proportions, where theſe virtues lie,
A perfect form their equal aids ſupply;
And, while unchanged the efficient cauſes reign,
Age following age the unvaried race maintain.
But where crude elements diſtemper'd riſe,
And caſt their ſickening vapours round the ſkies,
Unlike that harmony of human frame,
Where God's firſt works and nature's were the ſame,
The unconſcious tribes, attempering to the clime,
Still vary downward with the years of time;
Till fix'd, at laſt, their characters abide,
And local likeneſs feeds their local pride.
The ſoul too varying with the changing clime,
Feeble or fierce, or groveling or ſublime,
Forms with the body to a kindred plan,
And lives the ſame, a nation or a man.
Yet think not clime alone, or height of poles,
On every ſhore, the ſprings of life controuls;

A different caſt the glowing zone demands,
In Paria's blooms, from Tombut's burning ſands.
Internal cauſes, thro' the earth and ſkies,
Blow in the breeze or on the mountain riſe,
Thro' air and ocean, with their changes run,
Breathe from the ground or circle with the ſun.
Where theſe long ſhores their boundleſs regions ſpread
See the ſame form all different tribes pervade;
Thro' all, alike, the fertile foreſts bloom,
And all, uncultured, ſhed a ſolemn gloom;
Thro' all great nature's boldeſt features riſe,
Sink into vales and tower amid the ſkies;
Streams, darkly-winding, ſtretch a broader ſway,
The groves and mountains bolder walks diſplay;
A dread ſublimity informs the whole,
And wakes a dread ſublimity of ſoul.
Yet time and art ſhall other changes find,
And open ſtill and vary ſtill the mind;
The countleſs ſwarms that tread theſe dank abodes,
Who glean ſpontaneous fruits and range the woods,
Fix'd here for ages, in their ſwarthy face,
Diſplay the wild complexion of the place.
Yet when their tribes to happy nations riſe,
And earth by culture warms the genial ſkies,
A fairer tint and more majeſtic grace
Shall fluſh their features and exalt the race;
While milder arts, with ſocial joys refined,
Inſpire new beauties in the growing mind.

Thy followers too, fair Europe's nobleſt pride,
When future gales ſhall wing them o'er the tide,
A ruddier hue* and deeper ſhade ſhall gain,
And ſtalk, in ſtatelier figures, o'er the plain.
While nature's grandeur lifts the eye abroad
O'er theſe dread footſteps of the forming God;
Wing'd on a wider glance the venturous ſoul
Bids greater powers and bolder thoughts unroll;
The ſage, the chief, the patriot, unconfined,
Shield the weak world and counſel for mankind.
But think not thou, in all the race of man,
That different pairs, in different climes, began;
Or tribes diſtinct, by ſignal marks conſeſt,
Were born to ſerve or ſubjugate the reſt.
The hero heard; But ſay, celeſtial Guide,
Who led the wanderers o'er the billowy tide?
Could theſe dark bands, unſkill'd the paths to gain,
To build the bark, or croſs the extended main,
Deſcry the coaſt, or tread the bleſt abode,
Unled, unguided by the hand of God?
When firſt thy roving race, the Power reply'd,
Learn'd by the ſtars the devious ſail to guide,
From ſtormy Helleſpont explored the way,
And ſought the bound'ries of the midland ſea;
Ere great Alcides form'd the impious plan,
To bound the ſail and fix the range of man,

* The complexion of the inhabitants of North America, who are deſcended from the Engliſh and Dutch, is evidently darker, and their ſtature taller, than thoſe of the Engliſh and Dutch in Europe.

Driven from thoſe rocky ſtraits, a hapleſs train
Roll'd on the waves that ſweep the weſtern main,
While eaſtern ſtorms the billowing ſkies o'erſhade,
Nor ſun nor ſtars afford their wonted aid.
For many a darkſome day, o'erwhelm'd and toſt,
Their ſails, their oars in ſwallowing ſurges loſt;
At length, the clouds withdrawn, they ſad deſcry
Their courſe directing from their native ſky;
No hope remains; while, o'er the flaming zone,
The winds ſtill bear them with the circling ſun;
Till the wild walks of this delightful coaſt
Receive to lonely ſeats the ſuffering hoſt.
The fruitful plains invite their ſteps to roam,
Renounce their ſorrows and forget their home;
Revolving years their ceaſeleſs wanderings led,
And from their ſons deſcending nations ſpread.

Theſe round the ſouth and middle regions ſtray,
Where cultured fields their growing arts diſplay;
While northern tribes a later ſource demand,
And ſhow their wanderers from the Aſian ſtrand.
Far tow'rd the diſtant pole thy view extend;
See iſles and ſhores and ſeas Pacific blend;
And that blue coaſt, where Amur's currents glide,
From thy own world a narrow frith divide;
There Tartar hoſts for countleſs years, have ſail'd,
And changing tribes the alternate regions hail'd.

He look'd: the opening ſhores beneath him ſpread,
And moving nations on the margin tread.

As, when autumnal ſtorms awake their force,
The ſtorks foreboding tempt their ſouthern courſe;
From all the fields collecting throngs ariſe,
Mount on the wing and croud along the ſkies;
Thus, to his eye, from far Siberia's ſhore,
O'er iſles and ſeas, the gathering people pour;
From thoſe cold regions hail a happier ſtrand,
Leap from the wave and tread the welcome land;
The growing tribes extend their ſouthern ſway,
And widely wander to a milder day.
But why; the chief return'd, if ages paſt
Have led theſe vagrants o'er the wilder'd waſte—
If human ſouls, for ſocial compact given,
Inform their nature with the ſtamp of heaven,
Why the dread glooms forever muſt they rove?
And no mild joys their temper'd paſſions move?
Ages remote and dark thou bring'ſt to light,
When the firſt leaders dared the weſtern flight;
On other ſhores, in every eaſtern clime,
Since that unletter'd, diſtant tract of time, [place,
What arts have ſhone! what empires found their
What golden ſceptres ſway'd the human race!
What guilt and grandeur from their ſeats been hurl'd,
And dire divulſions ſhook the changing world.
Ere Rome's bold eagle clave the affrighted air,
Ere Sparta form'd her death-like ſons of war,
Ere proud Chaldea ſaw her greatneſs riſe,
Or Memphian columns heaved againſt the ſkies;

Theſe tribes have ſtray'd beneath the fruitful zone,
Their ſouls unpoliſh'd and their name unknown.
The Voice of heaven reply'd; A ſcanty band,
In that far age, approach'd the untrodden land.
Prolific wilds, with game and fruitage crown'd,
Supply'd their wiſhes from the uncultured ground.
By nature form'd to rove, the reſtleſs mind,
Of freedom fond, will ramble unconfined,
Till all the realm is fill'd, and rival right
Reſtrains their ſteps, and bids their force unite;
When common ſafety builds a common cauſe,
Conforms their intereſts and inſpires their laws;
By mutual checks their different manners blend,
Their fields bloom joyous and their walls aſcend.
Here, to their growing hoſts, no bounds aroſe,
They claim'd no ſafeguard, as they fear'd no foes;
Round all the land their ſcattering ſons muſt ſtray,
Ere arts could riſe, or power extend the ſway.
And what a world their mazy wanderings led!
What ſtreams and wilds in boundleſs order ſpread!
See the ſhores lengthen, ſee the waters roll,
To each far main and each extended pole!
Yet circling years the deſtined courſe have run,
The realms are peopled and their arts begun.
Behold, where that mid region ſtrikes the eyes,
A few fair cities glitter to the ſkies;
There move, in eaſtern pomp, the ſcenes of ſtate,
And temples heave, magnificently great.

The hero look'd; when from the varying height,
Three growing ſplendors, riſing on the ſight,
Flamed like a conſtellation: high in view,
Aſcending near, their opening glories drew;
In equal pomp, beneath their roofs of gold,
Three ſpiry towns, in blazing pride, unfold.
So, led by viſions of the guiding God,
The ſacred Seer, in Patmos' waſte who trod,
Saw the dim vault of heaven its folds unbend,
And gates and ſpires and ſtreets and domes deſcend;
With golden ſkies, and ſuns and rainbows crown'd,
The new-form'd city lights the world around.

Fair on the north, bright Mexico, aroſe,
A mimic morn her ſparkling towers diſcloſe,
An ample range the opening ſtreets diſplay,
Give back the ſun and ſhed internal day;
The circling wall with ſky-built turrets frown'd,
And look'd defiance to the realms around;
A glimmering lake, without the walls, retires, [ſpires.
Inverts the trembling towers and ſeems a grove of

Bright, o'er the midſt, on columns lifted high,
A riſing ſtructure claims a loftier ſky;
O'er the tall gates ſublimer arches bend,
Courts larger lengthen, bolder walks aſcend,
Starr'd with ſuperior gems, the porches ſhine,
And ſpeak the royal reſidence within.

There, robed in ſtate, high on a golden throne,
Mid ſuppliant kings, dread Montezuma ſhone:

Mild in his eye a temper'd grandeur ſate,
Great ſeem'd his ſoul, with conſcious power elate;
In aſpect open, haughty and ſincere,
Untamed by croſſes and unknown to fear,
Of fraud incautious, credulous and vain,
Encloſed with favourites and of friends unſeen.
Round the rich throne, with various luſtre bright,
Gems undiſtinguiſh'd, caſt a changing light;
Sapphires and emeralds deck the ſplendent ſcene,
Sky-tinctures mingling with the vernal green;
The ruby's bluſh, the amber's flames unfold,
And diamonds brighten from the burning gold;
Through all the dome the living blazes blend,
And caſt their rainbows where the arches bend.
Wide round the walls, with mimic action gay,
In order ranged, hiſtoric figures ſtray,
And ſhow, in Memphian ſtyle, with rival grace,
Their boaſted chiefs and all their regal race.
Thro' the full gates, and round each ample ſtreet,
Unnumber'd throngs, in various concourſe, meet,
Ply different toils, new walls and ſtructures rear,
Or till the fields, or train the ranks of war.
Thro' ſpreading realms the ſkirts of empire bend,
New temples riſe and other plains extend;
Thrice ten fair provinces, in culture gay,
Bleſs the ſame monarch and enlarge his ſway.
A ſmile benignant kindling in his eyes,
Oh happy clime! the exulting hero cries;

Far in the midland, ſafe from foreign foes,
Thy joys ſhall ripen as thy grandeur grows,
To future years thy riſing fame extend,
And fires of nations from thy ſons deſcend.
May no gold-thirſty race thy temples tread,
Nor ſtain thy ſtreams nor heap thy plains with dead;
No Bovadilla ſieze the tempting ſpoil,
Ovando dark, or ſacrilegious Boyle,
In mimic prieſthood grave, or robed in ſtate,
O'erwhelm thy glories in oblivious fate.
Vain are thy fondeſt hopes, the Power reply'd,
Theſe rich abodes from ravening hoſts to hide;
Teach harden'd guilt and cruelty to ſpare
The guardleſs prize, and check the waſte of war.
Think not the vulture, o'er the field of ſlain,
Where baſe and brave promiſcuous ſtrow the plain,
Where the young hero, in the pride of charms,
Pours deeper crimſon o'er his ſpotleſs arms,
Will paſs the tempting prey, and glut his rage
On harder fleſh, and carnage black with age;
O'er all alike he darts his eager eye,
Whets the dire beak and hovers down the ſky,
From countleſs corſes picks the dainty food,
And ſcreams and fattens in the pureſt blood.
So the dire hoſts, that trace thy daring way,
By gold allured to ſail the unfathom'd ſea,
Power all their aim and avarice all their joy,
Seize brighteſt realms and happieſt tribes deſtroy.

Thine the dread taſk, O Cortez, here to ſhow
What unknown crimes can heighten human woe,
On theſe fair fields the blood of realms to pour,
Tread ſceptres down and print thy ſteps in gore,
With gold and carnage ſwell thy fateleſs mind,
And live and die the blackeſt of mankind.

Now ſee, from yon fair iſle, his murdering band
Stream o'er the wave and mount the fated ſtrand;
On the wild ſhore behold his fortreſs riſe,
The fleet in flames aſcends the darken'd ſkies.
The march begins; the nations, from afar,
Quake in his ſight, and wage the fruitleſs war;
O'er the rich provinces he bends his way,
Kings in his chain, and kingdoms for his prey;
While, robed in peace, great Montezuma ſtands,
And crowns and treaſures ſparkle in his hands,
Proffers the empire, yields the ſceptred ſway,
Bids vaſſal'd millions tremble and obey;
And plies the victor, with inceſſant prayer,
Thro' ravaged realms the harmleſs race to ſpare.
But prayers and tears and ſceptres plead in vain,
Nor threats can move him, nor a world reſtrain;
While bleſt religion's proſtituted name,
And monkiſh fury guides the ſacred flame:
O'er fanes and altars, fires unhallow'd bend,
Climb o'er the walls and up the towers aſcend,
Pour, round the lowering ſkies, the ſmoky flood,
And whelm the fields, and quench their rage in blood.

The hero heard; and, with a heaving ſigh,
Dropp'd the full tear that ſtarted in his eye,
Oh hapleſs day! his trembling voice reply'd,
That ſaw my wandering ſtreamer mount the tide!
Oh! had the lamp of heaven, to that bold ſail,
Ne'er mark'd the paſſage nor awaked the gale,
Taught eaſtern worlds theſe beauteous climes to find,
Nor led thoſe tygers forth to curſe mankind.
Then had the tribes, beneath theſe bounteous ſkies,
Seen their walls widen and their ſpires ariſe;
Down the long tracts of time their glory ſhone,
Broad as the day and laſting as the ſun:
The growing realms, beneath thy ſhield that reſt,
O hapleſs monarch, ſtill thy power had bleſt,
Enjoy'd the pleaſures that ſurround thy throne,
Survey'd thy virtues and ſublimed their own.
Forgive me, prince; this impious arm hath led
The unſeen ſtorm that blackens o'er thy head;
Taught the dark ſons of ſlaughter where to roam,
To ſeize thy crown and ſeal thy nation's doom.
Arm, ſleeping empire, meet the daring band,
Drive back the terrors, ſave the ſinking land——
Yet vain the ſtrife! behold the ſweeping flood!
Forgive me nature, and forgive me God.
Thus, from his heart, while ſpeaking ſorrows roll,
The Power, reproving, ſooth'd his tender ſoul.
Father of this new world, thy tears give o'er,
Let virtue grieve and Heaven be blamed no more.

Enough for man, with perſevering mind,
To act his part and ſtrive to bleſs his kind;
Enough for thee, o'er thy dark age to riſe,
With genius warm'd, and favour'd of the ſkies.
For this my guardian care thy youth inſpired,
To virtue raiſed thee, and with glory fired,
Bade in thy plan each diſtant world unite,
And wing'd thy ſtreamer for the adventurous flight.
Nor think no bleſſings ſhall thy toils attend,
Or theſe fell tyrants can defeat their end.
Such impious deeds, in Heaven's all-ruling plan,
Lead in diſguiſe the nobleſt bliſs of man.
Long have thy race, to narrow ſhores confined,
Trod the ſame round that cramp'd the roving mind;
Now, borne on bolder wings, with happier flight,
The world's broad bounds unfolding to the ſight,
The mind ſhall ſoar; the nations catch the flame,
Enlarge their counſels and extend their fame;
While mutualities the ſocial joys enhance,
And the laſt ſtage of civil rule advance.
Tho' impious ruffians ſpread their crimes abroad,
And o'er theſe empires pour the purple flood;
Tis thus religious rage, its own dire bane,
Shall fall at laſt, with all its millions ſlain,
And buried gold, drawn bounteous from the mine,
Give wings to commerce and the world refine.
Now to yon ſouthern walls extend thy view,
And mark the rival ſeats of rich Peru.

There Quito's airy plains, exalted high,
With loftier temples riſe along the ſky;
And elder Cuſco's richer roofs unfold,
Flame on the day and ſhed their ſuns of gold.
Another range, in theſe delightful climes,
Spreads a broad theatre for unborn crimes.
Another Cortez ſhall the treaſures view,
The rage rekindle and the guilt renew;
His treaſon, fraud, and every dire decree,
O curſt Pizarro, ſhall revive in thee.
There reigns a prince, whoſe hand the ſceptre claims,
Thro' a long lineage of imperial names;
Where the brave roll of following Incas trace
The diſtant father of their realm and race,
Immortal Capac. He in youthful pride,
With fair Oella, his illuſtrious bride,
In virtuous guile, proclaim'd their birth begun,
From the pure ſplendors of their God, the ſun;
With power and dignity a throne to found,
Fix the mild ſway and ſpread their arts around;
Cruſh the dire Gods that human victims claim,
And point all worſhip to a nobler name;
With cheerful rites, the due devotions pay
To the bright beam, that gives the changing day.
On this fair plan, the children of the ſkies
Bade, in the wild, a growing empire riſe;
Beneath their hand, and ſacred to their fame,
Roſe yon fair walls, that meet the ſolar flame.

Succeeding ſovereigns ſpread their bounds afar,
By arts of peace and temper'd force of war;
Till theſe ſurrounding realms the ſceptre own,
And grateful millions hail the genial ſun.

Behold, in yon fair lake, a beauteous iſle,
Where fruits and flowers, in rich profuſion ſmile;
High in the midſt a ſacred temple riſe,
Seat of the ſun, and pillar of the ſkies.
The roofs of burniſh'd gold, the blazing ſpires
Light the glad heavens and loſe their upward fires;
Fix'd in the flaming front, with living ray,
A diamond circlet gives the rival day;
In whoſe bright face forever looks abroad
The radiant image of the beaming God.
Round the wide courts, and in the ſolemn dome,
A white-robed train of holy virgins bloom;
Their pious hands the ſacred rites require,
To grace the offerings, and preſerve the fire.

On this bleſt iſle, with flowery garlands crown'd,
That ancient pair, in charms of youth, were found,
Whoſe union'd ſouls the mighty plan deſign'd,
To bleſs the nations* and reform mankind.

* From the traditions of Capac and Oella, mentioned by the Spaniſh hiſtorians, they appear to have been very great and diſtinguiſhed characters. About three centuries previous to the diſcovery of that country by the Spaniards, the natives of Peru were as rude ſavages as any in America. They had no fixed habitations, no ideas of permanent property; they wandered naked like the beaſts, and, like them, depended on the events of each day for a precarious ſubſiſtence. At this period, Manco Capac and his wife Mama Oella appeared on a ſmall iſland in the lake Titiaca; near which the city of Cuſco was afterwards erected. Theſe perſons, in

The hero heard, and thus the Power beſought;
What arts unknown the wonderous bleſſings wrought?
What human ſkill, in that benighted age,
In ſavage ſouls could quell the barbarous rage?
With leagues of peace combine the wide domain?
And teach the virtues in their laws to reign?

order to eſtabliſh a belief of their divinity, in the minds of the people, were clothed in white garments of cotton; and declared themſelves deſcended from the Sun, who was their father and the God of that country. They aſſirmed that he was offended at their cruel and perpetual wars, their barbarous modes of worſhip, and their neglecting to make the beſt uſe of the bleſſings he was conſtantly beſtowing, in fertilizing the earth and producing vegetation; that he pitied their wretched ſtate, and had ſent his own children to inſtruct them, and to eſtabliſh a number of wiſe regulations, by which they might be rendered happy.

By ſome extraordinary method of perſuaſion, theſe perſons drew together a number of the ſavage tribes, laid the foundations of the city of Cuſco, and eſtabliſhed what was called the kingdom of the Sun, or the Peruvian empire. In the reign of Manco Capac, the dominion was extended about eight leagues from the city; and at the end of three centuries, it was eſtabliſhed fifteen hundred miles on the coaſt of the Pacific ocean; and from that ocean to the mountains of the Andes. During this period, through a ſucceſſion of twelve monarchs, the original conſtitution, eſtabliſhed by the firſt Inca, remained unaltered; and was at laſt overturned by an accident, which no human wiſdom could foreſee or prevent.

For a more particular diſquiſition on the character and inſtitutions of this great Legiſlator, the Reader is referred to a diſſertation prefixed to the third Book.

Mama Oella is ſaid to have invented many of the domeſtic arts, particularly that of making garments of cotton and other vegetable ſubſtances.

In the paſſage preceding this reference, I have alluded to moſt of the traditions, relating to the manner of their introducing themſelves, and eſtabliſhing their dominion. In the remainder of the ſecond, and through the whole of the third Book, I have given what may be ſuppoſed a probable narrative of their real origin and conduct. I have thrown the epiſode into an epic form, and given it ſo conſiderable a place in the Poem, for the purpoſe of exhibiting in action the characters, manners and ſentiments of the different tribes of ſavages, that inhabit the mountains of South-America.

Long is their ſtory, ſaid the Power divine,
The labours great and glorious the deſign;
And tho' to earthly minds, their actions reſt,
By years obſcured, in flowery fiction dreſt,
Yet my glad voice ſhall wake their honour'd name,
And give their virtues to immortal fame.
Led by his father's wars, in early prime,
Young Capac wander'd from a northern clime;
Along theſe ſhores, with livelier verdure gay,
Thro' fertile vales, the adventurous armies ſtray.
He ſaw the tribes unnumber'd range the plain,
And rival chiefs, by rage and ſlaughter, reign;

In reviewing this part of my ſubject, I have to lament, that ſo extraordinary and meritorious a Poem, as the Araucana of don Alonſo de Ercilla, of the ſixteenth century, has never yet appeared in our language. The account given of that work by Voltaire excited my curioſity at an early day; as I conceived the manners and characters of the mountain ſavages of Chile, as deſcribed by that heroic Spaniard, muſt have opened a new field of Poetry, rich with uncommon ornaments.

That elegant and conciſe ſketch of it lately given to the public by Mr. Hayley, has come into my hands, ſince I have been writing theſe notes, and but a few days previous to the Poem's being put to the preſs. Yet it gives me reaſon to hope, with every friend of literature, that the whole of that great work will ere long be preſented to the Engliſh Reader by the ſame hand.

It is uſually preſumed, that every Author muſt have read all that have gone before him, at leaſt on ſubjects ſimilar to what he attempts; yet the Luſiad of Camoens, a Poem of great merit on the expedition of Gama, I had ſought for in vain in different parts of America, and even ſent to Europe without being able to obtain it; till, a few days ſince, it came to hand in the majeſtic and ſpirited tranſlation of Mr. Mickle. The extenſive and ſublime objects opened to our view in a work which celebrates the diſcovery of one part of the globe, may well be thought worthy the contemplation of a writer, who endeavours to trace the conſequences of a ſimilar event in another. Of this I was before ſenſible; but theſe are not the only diſadvantages that an Author, in a new country, and in moderate circumſtances, muſt have to encounter.

He ſaw the fires their dreadful Gods adore,
Their altars ſtaining with their children's gore;
Yet mark'd their reverence for the Sun, whoſe beam
Proclaims his bounties and his power ſupreme;
Who ſails in happier ſkies, diffuſing good,
Demands no victim and receives no blood.

In peace returning with his conquering ſire,
Fair glory's charms his youthful ſoul inſpire;
With virtue warm'd, he fix'd the generous plan,
To build his greatneſs on the bliſs of man.

By nature formed to daring deeds of fame,
Tall, bold and beauteous roſe his ſtately frame;
Strong moved his limbs, a mild majeſtic grace
Beam'd from his eyes and open'd in his face;
O'er the dark world his mind ſuperior ſhone,
And, ſoaring, ſeem'd the ſemblance of the ſun.
Now fame's prophetic viſions lift his eyes,
And future empires from his labours riſe;
Yet ſofter fires his daring views controul,
Sway the warm wiſh and fill the changing ſoul.
Shall the bright genius, kindled from above,
Bend to the milder, gentler voice of love;
That bounds his glories, and forbids to part
From that calm bower, that held his glowing heart?
Or ſhall the toils, imperial heroes claim,
Fire his bold boſom with a patriot flame?
Bid ſceptres wait him on the diſtant ſhore?
And bleſt Oella meet his eyes no more?

Retiring penſive, near the wonted ſhade,
His unſeen ſteps approach the beauteous maid.
Her raven-locks roll on her heaving breaſt,
And wave luxuriant round her ſlender waiſt,
Gay wreaths of flowers her lovely brows adorn,
And her white raiment mocks the pride of morn.
Her buſy hand ſuſtains a bending bough,
Where woolly cluſters ſpread their robes of ſnow,
From opening pods, unbinds the fleecy ſtore,
And culls her labours for the evening bower.
Her ſprightly ſoul, by deep invention led,
Had found the ſkill to turn the twiſting thread,
To ſpread the woof, the ſhuttle to command,
Till various garments graced her forming hand.
Here, while her thoughts with her own Capac rove,
O'er former ſcenes of innocence and love,
Through many a field his fancied dangers ſhare,
And wait him glorious from the diſtant war;
Bleſt with the ardent wiſh, her glowing mind
A ſnowy veſture for the prince deſign'd;
She ſeeks the pureſt wool, to web the fleece,
The ſacred emblem of returning peace.
Sudden his near approach her breaſt alarms;
He flew enraptured to her yielding arms,
And loſt, diſſolving in a ſofter name,
The diſtant empire and the fire of fame.
At length, retiring o'er the homeward field,
Their mutual minds to happy converſe yield,

O'er various ſcenes of bliſsful life they ran,
When thus the warrior to the fair began.
Joy of my life, thou know'ſt my roving mind,
With theſe grim tribes, in dark abodes, confined,
With grief hath mark'd what vengeful paſſions ſway
The bickering bands, and ſweep the race away.
Where late my diſtant ſteps the war purſued,
The fertile plains grew boundleſs as I view'd;
Increaſing nations trod the waving wild,
And joyous nature more delightful ſmiled.
No changing ſeaſons there the flowers deform,
No dread volcano, and no mountain ſtorm;
Rains ne'er invade, nor livid lightnings play,
Nor clouds obſcure the radiant Power of day.
But, while the God, in ceaſeleſs glory bright,
Rolls o'er the day and fires his ſtars by night,
Unbounded fulneſs flows beneath his reign,
Seas yield their treaſures, fruits adorn the plain;
Warm'd by his beam, their mountains pour the flood,
And the cool breezes wake beneath the God.
My anxious thoughts indulge the great deſign,
To form thoſe nations to a ſway divine;
Deſtroy the rights of every dreadful Power,
Whoſe crimſon altars glow with human gore;
To laws and mildneſs teach the realms to yield,
And nobler fruits to grace the cultured field.
But great, my charmer, is the taſk of fame,
The countleſs tribes to temper and to tame,

Full many a ſpacious wild my ſoul muſt ſee,
Spread dreary bounds between my joys and me;
And yon bright Godhead circle many a year;
Each lonely evening number'd with a tear.
Long robes of white* my ſhoulders muſt embrace,
To ſpeak my lineage of etherial race;
That wondering tribes may tremble, and obey
The radiant offspring of the Power of day. [creaſe,
And when thro' cultured fields their bowers en-
And ſtreams and plains ſurvey the works of peace,
When theſe glad hands the rod of nations claim,
And happy millions bleſs thy Capac's name,
Then ſhall he feign a journey to the Sun,
To bring the partner of the peaceful throne;
So ſhall deſcending kings the line ſuſtain,
And unborn ages bloom beneath their reign.
Will then my fair, in that delightful hour,
Forſake theſe wilds and hail a happier bower?
And now conſenting, with approving ſmiles,
Bid the young warrior tempt the daring toils?
And, ſweetly patient, wait the flight of days,
That crown our labours with immortal praiſe?
Silent the fair one heard; her moiſtening eye
Spoke the full ſoul, nor could her voice reply;

* As the art of ſpinning is ſaid to have been invented by Oella; it is no improbable fiction, to ſuppoſe they firſt aſſumed theſe white garments of cotton, as an emblem of the ſun; in order to inſpire that reverence for their perſons which was neceſſary to their ſucceſs; and that ſuch a dreſs ſhould be continued in the family, as a badge of royalty.

Till ſofter accents ſooth'd her liſtening ear,
Compoſed her tumult and allay'd her fear.
Think not, enchanting maid, my ſteps would part,
While ſilent ſorrows heave that tender heart:
More dear to me are bleſt Oella's joys,
Than all the lands that bound the bending ſkies;
Nor thou, bright Sun, ſhould'ſt bribe my ſoul to reſt,
And leave one ſtruggle in her lovely breaſt.
Yet think in thoſe vaſt climes, my gentle fair,
What hapleſs millions claim our guardian care;
How age to age leads on the dreadful gloom,
And rage and ſlaughter croud the untimely tomb;
No ſocial joys their wayward paſſions prove,
Nor peace nor pleaſure treads the ſavage grove;
Mid thouſand heroes and a thouſand fair,
No fond Oella meets her Capac there.
Yet, taught by thee each nobler joy to prize,
With ſofter charms the virgin race ſhall riſe,
Awake new virtues, every grace improve,
And form their minds for happineſs and love.
Behold, where future years, in pomp, deſcend,
How worlds and ages on thy voice depend!
And, like the Sun, whoſe all-delighting ray
O'er thoſe mild borders ſheds ſereneſt day,
Diffuſe thy bounties, give my ſteps to rove,
A few ſhort months the noble taſk to prove,
And, ſwift return'd from glorious toils, declare
What realms ſubmiſſive wait our foſtering care.

And will my prince, my Capac, borne away,
Thro' thoſe dark wilds, in queſt of empire, ſtray?
Where tygers fierce command the howling wood,
And men like tygers thirſt for human blood.
Think'ſt thou no dangerous deed the courſe attends?
Alone, unaided by thy ſire and friends?
Even chains and death may meet my rover there,
Nor his laſt groan could reach Oella's ear.
But chains, nor death, nor groans ſhall Capac prove,
Unknown to her, while ſhe has power to rove.
Cloſe by thy ſide where'er thy wanderings ſtray,
My equal ſteps ſhall meaſure all the way;
With borrow'd ſoul each dire event I'll dare,
Thy toils to leſſen and thy dangers ſhare.
Command, bleſt chief, ſince virtue bids thee go
To rule the realms and baniſh human woe,
Command theſe hands two ſnowy robes to weave,
The Sun to mimic and the tribes deceive;
Then let us range, and ſpread the peaceful ſway,
The radiant children of the Power of day.
The lovely counſel pleaſed. The ſmiling chief
Approved her courage and diſpel'd her grief;
Then to the diſtant bower in haſte they move,
Begin their labours and prepare to rove.
Soon grow the robes beneath her forming care,
And the fond parents wed the noble pair;
But, whelm'd in grief, beheld, the approaching dawn,
Their joys all vaniſh'd, and their children gone.

Nine changing days, thro' ſouthern wilds, they ſtray'd,
Now wrapp'd in glooms, now gleaming thro' the glade,
Till the tenth morning, with an orient ſmile,
Beheld them blooming in the happy iſle.
The toil begins; to every neighbouring band,
They ſpeak the meſſage and their faith demand;
With various art ſuperior powers diſplay,
To prove their lineage and confirm their ſway.
The aſtoniſh'd tribes behold with glad ſurprize,
The Gods deſcended from the favouring ſkies;
Adore their perſons, robed in ſhining white,
Receive their laws and leave each horrid rite;
Build with aſſiſting toil, the golden throne,
And hail and bleſs the ſceptre of the Sun.

A DISSERTATION

On the GENIUS and INSTITUTIONS of MANCO CAPAC.

ALTHOUGH the original inhabitants of America in general deſerve to be claſſed among the moſt unimproved ſavages that have ever been diſcovered; yet the Mexican and Peruvian governments exhibit remarkable inſtances of order and regularity. In the difference of national character between theſe two empires, we may diſcern the influence of political ſyſtems on the human mind; and infer the importance of the taſk which a legiſlator undertakes, in attempting to reduce a barbarous people under the controul of government and laws. The Mexican conſtitution was formed to render its ſubjects brave and powerful; but, while it ſucceeded in this object, it tended to remove them farther from the real bleſſings of ſociety, than they were, while in the rudeſt ſtate of nature. The hiſtory of the world affords no inſtance of men whoſe manners were equally ferocious, and whoſe ſuperſtition was more bloody and unrelenting. On the contrary, the eſtabliſhments of Manco Capac carry the marks of a moſt benevolent and pacific ſyſtem; they tended to humanize the world and render his people happy; while his ideas of the Deity were ſo perfect, as to bear a compariſon with the enlightened doctrines of Socrates or Plato.

THE moſt diſtinguiſhed characters in hiſtory, who have been conſidered as legiſlators among barbarous nations, are Moſes, Lycurgus, Solon, Numa, Mahomet and Peter of Ruſſia. Of theſe, only the two former and the two latter appear really to deſerve that character. Solon and Numa poſſeſſed not the means nor the opportunity of ſhewing their talents in the buſineſs of original legiſlation. Athens and Rome were conſiderably advanced in civilization, before theſe characters aroſe. The moſt they could do was to correct and amend conſtitutions already formed. Solon, in particular, may be conſidered as a wiſe politician; but by no means as the founder of a nation. The Athenians were too far advanced in ſociety to admit any radical alteration in their form of government; if indeed any form can be ſaid to exiſt, where every thing is left to the controul of a capricious multitude. The inſtitutions of Numa were more effective and durable; his religious ceremonies were, for many ages, the moſt powerful check upon the licentious and turbulent Romans. By inculcating a remarkable reverence for the Gods, and making it neceſſary to conſult the Auſpices, when any thing important was to be tranſacted, he rendered the popular ſuperſtition ſubſervient to the views of policy, and gave the ſenate a ſteady check upon the extravagance of the plebeans. But the conſtitutions of Rome and Athens, however the ſubject of ſo much injudicious applauſe, were never fixed upon any permanent principles; though the wiſdom of ſome of their rulers, and the ſpirit of liberty that inſpired the people, juſtly demand our admiration.

Each of the other legiſlators above mentioned deſerves a particular conſideration; as acting in ſtations ſomewhat ſimilar to that of the Peruvian lawgiver. Three objects are to be attended to, by the legiſlator of a barbarous people. Firſt, that his ſyſtem be ſuch as is capable of reducing the greateſt number of men under one juriſdiction. Secondly, that it apply to ſuch principles in human nature for its ſupport, as are univerſal and permanent; in order to enſure the duration of the government. Thirdly, that it admit of improvements correſpondent to any advancement in knowledge or variation of circumſtances, that may happen to its ſubjects; without endangering the principle of government, by ſuch innovations. So far therefore as the ſyſtems of thoſe legiſlators agree with theſe fundamental principles, they are worthy of reſpect; and ſo far as they deviate, they may be conſidered as defective and imperfect.

To begin with Moſes and Lycurgus; it is neceſſary in the firſt place to obſerve, that, in order to judge of the merit of any inſtitutions, we muſt take into view the peculiar character of the people for whom they were framed. For want of this attention, many of the laws of Moſes have been ridiculed by ignorant ſceptics, and many eſtabliſhments of Lycurgus cenſured by as ignorant politicians. The Jews, who were led by Moſes out of Egypt, were not only uncivilized, but, having juſt riſen to independence from a ſtate of ſervitude, they united the manners of ſervants and ſavages; and their national character is a compoſition of ſervility and contumacy, ignorance, ſuperſtition, filthineſs and cruelty. Of their cruelty as a people we need no other proof than the account of their avengers of blood, and the readineſs with which the whole congregation turned executioners and ſtoned to death the devoted offenders. The Leproſy, a diſeaſe now wholly unknown, was undoubtedly produced by their total want of cleanlineſs, continued for ſucceſſive generations. In this view the frequent ablutions, the peculiar modes of trial, and many other inſtitutions may be wholly vindicated from ridicule, and proved to be not only wiſe, but even neceſſary regulations.

The Spartan lawgiver has been equally cenſured

for the toleration of theft and adultery. Among that race of Barbarians, theſe crimes were too general to admit of total prevention or univerſal puniſhment. By veſting all property in the community, inſtead of encouraging theft, he removed the poſſibility of the crime; and, in a nation where licentiouſneſs was generally indulged, it was a great ſtep towards introducing a purity of manners, to puniſh adultery in all caſes, wherein the crime was not committed by the free conſent of all parties injured or intereſted.

Those conſtitutions of government are beſt calculated for immediate energy and duration, which are interwoven with ſome religious ſyſtem. The legiſlator, who appears in the character of an inſpired perſon, renders his political inſtitutions ſacred, and intereſts the conſcience as well as the judgement in their ſupport. The Jewiſh lawgiver had this advantage over the Spartan. He appeared not in the character of a mere earthly governor, but as an interpreter of the divine will. By injoining a religious obſervance of certain rites, he formed his people to habitual obedience; by directing their cruelty againſt the breakers of the laws, he at leaſt mitigated the rancour of private hatred; by forbidding uſury, and directing that real property ſhould return to the original families in the year of Jubilee, he prevented too great an inequality of property; and by ſelecting a particular tribe, to be the guardians and interpreters of religion, he prevented its myſteries from being the ſubject of profane and vulgar inveſtigation. To ſecure the permanency of his inſtitutions, he prohibited any intercourſe with foreigners, by ſevere reſtrictions; and formed his people to habits and a character diſagreeable to other nations; by which means any foreign intercourſe was prevented, from the mutual hatred of both parties.

To theſe inſtitutions the laws of Lycurgus bear a

moſt ſtriking reſemblance. The features of his conſtitution were ſevere and forbidding; it was however calculated to inſpire the moſt enthuſiaſtic love of liberty and martial honour. In no country was the patriotic paſſion more energetic than in Sparta; no laws ever excluded the idea of ſeparate property in an equal degree, or inſpired a more thorough contempt for the manners of other nations. The utter prohibition of money, commerce and almoſt every thing deſirable to effeminate nations, entirely excluded foreigners from Sparta; and, while it inſpired the people with contempt for others, it rendered them agreeable to each other. By theſe means, Lycurgus rendered the nation powerful and warlike; and to inſure the duration of his government he endeavoured to intereſt the conſciences of his people, by the aid of oracles and the oath he is ſaid to have exacted from them, to obey his laws till his return; when he went into a voluntary and perpetual exile.

From this view of the Jewiſh and Spartan inſtitutions, applied to the principles above ſtated, they appear, in the two firſt articles, conſiderably imperfect, and in the laſt, totally defective. Neither of them was calculated to bring any conſiderable territory or number of men under one juriſdiction; from this circumſtance alone, they could not be rendered permanent, as they muſt be conſtantly expoſed to their more powerful neighbours. But the third object of legiſlation, that of providing for the future progreſs of ſociety, which, as it regards the happineſs of mankind, is the moſt important of the three, was in both inſtances entirely neglected. Theſe ſyſtems appear to have been formed with an expreſs deſign to prevent all future improvement in knowledge, or enlargement of the human mind; and to fix thoſe nations forever in a ſtate of ignorance, ſuperſtition and barbariſm. To vindicate the Spartan from an imputation of weakneſs or inattention in this particular, it may be urged that he was ſurrounded by nations more powerful than his own; it was therefore impoſſible for him to commence an eſtabliſhment upon any other plan. And Moſes muſt be vindicated upon this idea, that the divine moral law, which was deſigned, at a future period, to regulate and harmonize the whole human race, muſt be preſerved in that nation, which was to give birth to the Saviour of mankind. If we allow him to have had a prophetic knowledge of theſe events, his inſtitutions may be pronounced unexceptionable in every part.

The inſtitutions of Mahomet, are next to be conſidered. The firſt object of legiſlation appears to have been better underſtood by the Arabian Prophet, than by either of the preceding ſages; his juriſdiction was capable of being enlarged to any extent of territory, and governing any number of nations, that might be ſubjugated by his powerful and enthuſiaſtic armies; and to obtain this object his ſyſtem of religion was admirably calculated. Like Moſes, he convinced his people that he acted as the vicegerent of Heaven; but with this capital advantage, adapting his religion to the natural feelings and propenſities of mankind, he multiplied his followers, by the allurements of pleaſure and the promiſe of a ſenſual paradiſe. Theſe circumſtances were likewiſe ſure to render his conſtitution permanent. His religious ſyſtem was ſo eaſy to be underſtood, ſo ſplendid and ſo inviting, there could be no danger that the people would loſe ſight of its principles, and no neceſſity of future prophets, to explain the doctrines, or reform the nation. To theſe advantages if we add the exact and rigid military diſcipline, the ſplendor and ſacredneſs of the monarch, and that total ignorance of the people, which ſuch a ſyſtem will produce and perpetuate, the eſtabliſhment muſt be evidently well calculated for extent and duration. But the laſt and moſt important end of government, that of mental improvement and ſocial happineſs, was deplorably loſt in the inſtitution. And there was probably more learning and real genius in Arabia, in the days of this extraordinary character, than can now be found in all the Turkiſh dominions.

On the contrary, the enterpriſing genius of the Ruſſian monarch appears to have been wholly bent on the arts of civilization, and the improvement of ſociety among his ſubjects. Happy in a legal title to a throne which already commanded a prodigious extent of country, he found that the firſt object of government was already ſecured; and by applying himſelf with great ſagacity and perſeverance, to the third object, he was ſure that the ſecond would be a neceſſary and invariable conſequence. He effected his purpoſes, important as they were, merely by the introduction of the arts, and the encouragement of politer manners. The greatneſs of his genius appears not ſo much in his inſtitutions, which he copied from other nations, as in the extraordinary meaſures he followed to introduce them, the judgement he ſhowed in ſelecting and adapting them to the genius of his ſubjects, and his ſurpriſing aſſiduity and ſucceſs, by which he raiſed a ſavage people to a dignified rank among European nations. All his plans were formed to encourage the future progreſs of ſociety; and their duration was enſured by their obvious value and importance. His ſucceſſors have followed his political meaſures, with great attention to the ſame objects; and the preſent reigning empreſs has rendered herſelf not unworthy of ſo high and honourable a deſcent.

To the genius and operation of the ſeveral forms of government above mentioned, we will compare that of the Peruvian Lawgiver. It is probable that the ſavages of Peru, before the time of Capac, among other objects of adoration, paid homage to the Sun. By availing himſelf of this popular ſentiment, he appeared, like Moſes and Mahomet, in the character of a divine legiſlator, endowed with ſupernatural powers. After impreſſing theſe ideas ſtrongly on the minds of the people, drawing together a number of the tribes and rendering them ſubſervient to his benevolent purpoſes, he applied himſelf to forming the outlines of a plan of policy, capable of founding and regulating an extenſive empire; wiſely calculated for perpetual duration; and expreſsly deſigned to improve the knowledge, peace and happineſs of a conſiderable portion of mankind. In the apportionment of the lands, and the aſſignment of real property, he invented a mode ſomewhat reſembling the Feudal Syſtem of Europe: yet this ſyſtem was wiſely checked in its operation, by a law ſimilar to that of Moſes, which regulated landed poſſeſſions in the year of Jubilee. He divided the lands into three parts; the firſt was conſecrated to the uſes of religion, the ſecond ſet apart for the Inca and his family, to enable him to defray the expences of government and to appear in the ſtyle of a monarch, the third, and much the largeſt portion, was allotted to the people; and this allotment was repeated every year, and varied according to the number and exigencies of each family.

As the Incan family appeared in the character of Divinities, it was neceſſary that a ſubordination of ranks ſhould be eſtabliſhed; in order to render the diſtinction between the monarch and his people more perceptible. With this view he created a band of Nobles, who were diſtinguiſhed by perſonal and hereditary honours. Theſe were united to the monarch by the ſtrongeſt ties of intereſt; in peace they acted as Judges, and ſuperintended the police of the empire, in war they commanded in the armies. The next order of men were the reſpectable peaſantry of the country, who compoſed the principal ſtrength of the nation. Below theſe was a claſs of men, who were the ſervants of the public; who cultivated the public lands. They poſſeſſed no property, and their only ſecurity depended on their regular induſtry and peaceable demeanour. Above all theſe orders, were the Inca and his family. He was poſſeſſed of abſolute and uncontroulable power; his mandates were regarded as the word of Heaven, and the double guilt of impiety and rebellion attended on diſobedience. To impreſs the utmoſt veneration for the Incan family, it was a fundamental principle, that the royal blood ſhould never be contaminated by any foreign alliance. The myſteries of religion were preſerved ſacred by the high prieſt of the royal family, under the controul of the king; and celebrated with rites, capaple of making the deepeſt impreſſion on the multitude. The annual diſtribution of the lands, while it provided for the varying circumſtances of each family, ſtrengthened the bands of ſociety, by preventing the different orders from interfering with each other; the peaſants could not vie with their ſuperiors, and the Nobles could not be ſubjected by misfortune to a ſubordinate ſtation. A conſtant habit of induſtry was inculcated upon all ranks by the ſurprizing force of example and emulation. The cultivation of the ſoil, which in moſt other countries is conſidered as one of the loweſt employments, was here regarded as a divine art. Having had no idea of it before, and being taught it by the children of their God, the people viewed it as a ſacred privilege, and conſidered it as an honour, to imitate and aſſiſt the Sun in opening the boſom of the earth and producing vegetation. That the government might be able to exerciſe the endearing acts of benevolence, the produce of the public lands was reſerved in magazines, to ſupply the wants of the unfortunate, as a depoſit for the people in times of general ſcarcity, and as a reſource in caſe of an invaſion.

These are the outlines of a government, the moſt ſimple and energetic conceivable, and capable of reducing the greateſt number of men under one juriſdiction; at the ſame time, accommodating its principle of action to every ſtate of ſociety, and every ſtage of improvement, by a ſingular and happy application to the paſſions of the human mind, it encouraged the advancement of knowledge, without being endangered by ſucceſs. That ſuch a government has a fair chance for perpetual duration is evident from this conſideration, that a band of Nobles are ever the firm ſupporters of regal authority; unleſs the monarch is ſo limited in his power, that the Nobles deſpiſe his influence. This could not be the caſe in Peru; the Nobles were juſtly proud of their elevated ſtation, though they could have no ambition to controul the Inca. They were ſenſible that their intereſt was connected with that of the monarch; and, ſuppoſing the influence of religion to be out of the queſtion, they would not attempt to deſtroy an inſtitution on which their happineſs depended. A check equally effective was, by the conſtitution of human nature, impoſed on the Inca. Elevated above the competition and rivalſhip which corrode and torment the boſoms of the great, he could have no ambition to gratify and no motive to induce him to an improper exerciſe of arbitrary power.

In the traits of character which diſtinguiſh this inſtitution, we may diſcern all the great ſtrokes of each of the legiſlators above mentioned. The pretenſions of Capac to divine authority were as artfully contrived and as effectual in their conſequences, as thoſe of Mahomet; his exploding the worſhip of evil beings and objects of terror, forbidding human ſacrifices, inculcating more rational ideas of the Deity, and accommodating the rites of worſhip to a God of juſtice and benevolence, produced a greater change in the national character of his people, than any of the laws of Moſes: Like Peter, he provided for the future improvement of ſociety; while his actions were never meaſured upon the ſmall and contracted ſcale, which limited the genius of Lycurgus.

THUS far we find the political ſyſtem of Capac at leaſt equal to thoſe of the moſt celebrated ancient or modern lawgivers. But in one particular his character is placed beyond all compariſon; I mean for his religious inſtitutions, and the juſt ideas he had formed, by the unenlightened efforts of human wiſdom, of the nature and attributes of the Deity.

AND here I ſhall premiſe, that idolatrous nations have never been guilty of thoſe glaring abſurdities with which they are uſually charged by the chriſtian world. The Perſian or Peruvian, when he directed his adoration to the Sun, conſidered it as the place of reſidence for the unknown Deity, whom he worſhipped, and who communicated from thence the bleſſings of light, warmth and vegetation; the Greek, who bowed at the ſtatue of Jupiter, ſuppoſed it animated with the preſence of his God; the Egyptian Apis, Iſis and Orus, the calf, the leek and the onion, though the theme of univerſal ridicule to other nations, were, in their firſt conſecration, like the Jewiſh Cherubim, ſymbolical repreſentations of the nature and attributes of their Deities. No man ever erected a ſtock or a ſtone for a real object of worſhip; but all ignorant nations have paid their adoration before the ſymbol of the Deity, in ſome ſhape or other, and directed their homage to the place of his ſuppoſed reſidence. Even among enlightened nations, we find many traces of the ſame ideas; the Papiſt bows to the Picture and the Crucifix; and the Methodiſt rolls up his eyes in prayer to the Sky. Perhaps unaſſiſted wiſdom can riſe no higher: and the reaſon why idol worſhip was forbidden in the divine law, was not becauſe of the erroneous ideas of the original inſtitutors, but becauſe the views of the vulgar, in proceſs of time, are apt to ſtop ſhort at the intermediate object, and to loſe ſight of the original inviſible Eſſence. But the great crime of idolatrous nations conſiſted in their aſcribing to the Deity the paſſions and attributes of the Devil, and in the horrid and murtherous rites of their worſhip. Mankind are more inclined to conſider the Deity as a God of vengeance than a God of mercy. Even among chriſtians moſt perſons aſcribe afflictions to the hand of Heaven and proſperity to their own merit and prudence. This principle operates in its full effect among ſavages. They uſually form no idea of a general ſuperintending Providence; they conſider not the Deity as the author of their beings, the Creator of the world and the diſpenſer of the happineſs they enjoy; they diſcern him not in the uſual courſe of nature, in the ſunſhine and in the ſhower, the productions of the earth and the bleſſing of ſociety; they find a Deity only in the ſtorm, the earthquake and the whirlwind; or aſcribe to him the evils of peſtilence and famine; they conſider him as interpoſing in wrath to change the courſe of nature, and exerciſing the attributes of rage and revenge. They adore him with rites ſuited to theſe attributes, with horror, with penance and with ſacrifice; they imagine him pleaſed with the ſeverity of their mortifications, with the oblations of blood and the cries of human victims; and hope to compound for greater judgements, by voluntary ſufferings and horrid ſacrifices, ſuited to the reliſh of his taſte.

PERHAPS no ſingle criterion can be given, which will determine more accurately the ſtate of ſociety in any age or nation, than their general ideas concerning the nature and attributes of the Deity. In the moſt enlightened periods of antiquity, only a very few of their wiſeſt Philoſophers, a Socrates, a Tully, or a Confucius, ever formed a juſt idea on the ſubject, or deſcribed the Deity as a God of purity, juſtice and benevolence. Can any thing then be more aſtoniſhing than to view a ſavage native of the ſouthern wilds of America, riſing in an age, void of every trace of learning or refinement, and acquiring by the mere efforts of reaſon, a ſublime and rational idea of the Parent of the univerſe!

He taught the nation to conſider him as the God of order and regularity; aſcribing to his influence the rotation of the ſeaſons, the productions of the earth and the bleſſings of health; eſpecially attributing to his inſpiration the wiſdom of their laws and that happy conſtitution, which was the delight and veneration of the people.

These humane ideas of religion had a ſenſible operation upon the manners of the nation. They never began an offenſive war with their ſavage neighbours; and, whenever their country was invaded, they made war, not to extirpate, but to civilize. The conquered tribes and thoſe taken captive were adopted into the nation; and, by blending with the conquerors, forgot their former rage and ferocity.

A system ſo juſt and benevolent, as might be expected, was attended with ſucceſs. In about three hundred years, the dominions of the Incas had extended fifteen hundred miles in length, and had introduced peace and proſperity through the whole region. The arts of ſociety had been carried to a conſiderable degree of improvement, and the authority of the Incan race univerſally acknowledged; when an event happened, that diſturbed the tranquility of the empire. Huana Capac, the twelfth monarch, had reduced the powerful kingdom of Quito, and annexed it to his empire. To conciliate the affections of his new ſubjects, he married a daughter of the ancient king of Quito. Thus, by violating a fundamental law of the Incas, he left at his death a diſputed ſucceſſion to the throne. Atabalipa, the ſon of Huana by the heireſs of Quito, being in poſſeſſion of the principal force of the Peruvian armies, which was left at that place on the death of his father, gave battle to his brother Huaſcar, who was the elder ſon of Huana by a lawful wife, and legal heir to the crown. After a long and deſtructive civil war, the former was victorious; and thus was that flouriſhing and happy kingdom left a prey to civil diſſentions, and to the few ſoldiers of Pizarro, who happened at that juncture to make a diſcent upon their coaſt. Thus he effected an eaſy conqueſt and an utter deſtruction of that unfortunate people. It is however extremely obvious, that this deplorable event is not to be charged on Capac, as the conſequence of any defect in his inſtitution. It is impoſſible that any original legiſlator ſhould effectually guard againſt the folly of a futute ſovereign. Capac had not only removed every temptation that could induce a wiſe prince to wiſh for a change in the conſtitution, but had connected the ruin of his authority with the change; for he, who diſregards any part of inſtitutions deemed ſacred, teaches his people to conſider the whole as an impoſture. Had he made a law ordaining that the Peruvians ſhould be abſolved from their allegiance to a prince, who ſhould violate the laws; it would evidently have implied poſſible error and imperfection in thoſe perſons whom the people were ordered to regard as Divinities : the reverence due to characters who made ſuch high pretenſions, would have been weakened ; and, inſtead of rendering the conſtitution perfect, ſuch a law would have been its greateſt defect. Beſides, it is probable the rupture might have been healed, and the ſucceſſion ſettled, with as little difficulty as frequently happens with partial revolutions in other kingdoms; had not the deſcent of the Spaniards prevented. And this event to a man in that age and country, was totally beyond the poſſibility of human foreſight. But viewing the concurrence of theſe fatal accidents, which reduced this flouriſhing empire to a level with many other ruined and departed kingdoms, it only proves that no human ſyſtem has the privilege to be perfect.

On the whole, it is evident, that the ſyſtem of Capac is the moſt ſurprizing exertion of human genius to be found in the hiſtory of mankind. When we conſider him as an individual emerging from the midſt of a barbarous people, having ſeen no poſſible example of the operation of laws in any country, originating a plan of religion and policy never equalled by the ſages of antiquity, civilizing an extenſive empire, and rendering religion and government ſubſervient to the general happineſs of mankind, there is no danger that we grow too warm in his praiſe, or pronounce too high an eulogium on his character. Had ſuch a genius appeared in Greece or Rome, he had been the ſubject of univerſal admiration ; had he ariſen in the favourite land of Turkey, his praiſes had filled a thouſand pages in the diffuſive writings of Voltaire.

BOOK III.

NOW, twice twelve years, the children of the ſkies
Beheld in peace their growing empire riſe;
O'er happy realms, diſplay'd their generous care,
Diffuſed their arts and ſooth d the rage of war;
Bade yon tall temple grace the favourite iſle.
The gardens bloom, the cultured valleys ſmile,
The aſpiring hills their ſpacious mines unfold.
Fair ſtructures blaze, and altars burn, in gold,
Thoſe broad foundations bend their arches high,
And heave imperial Cuſco to the ſky;
From that fair ſtream that mark'd their northern ſway,
Where Apurimac leads his lucid way,
To yon far glimmering lake, the ſouthern bound,
The growing tribes their peaceful dwellings found;
While wealth and grandeur bleſs'd the extended reign,
From the bold Andes to the weſtern main.

When, fierce from eaſtern wilds, the ſavage bands
Lead war and ſlaughter o'er the happy lands;
Thro' fertile fields the paths of culture trace,
And vow deſtruction to the Incan race.
While various fortune ſtrow'd the embattled plain,
And baffled thouſands ſtill the ſtriſe maintain,

The unconquer'd Inca wakes the lingering war,
Drives back their hoſt and ſpeeds their flight afar;
Till, fired with rage, they range the wonted wood,
And feaſt their ſouls on future ſcenes of blood.

Where yon blue ſummits hang their cliffs on high;
Frown o'er the plains and lengthen round the ſky;
Where vales exalted thro' the breaches run;
And drink the nearer ſplendors of the ſun,
From ſouth to north, the tribes innumerous wind,
By hills of ice and mountain ſtreams confined;
Rouſe neighbouring hoſts, and meditate the blow,
To blend their force and whelm the world below.
Capac, with caution, views the dark deſign,
From countleſs wilds what hoſtile myriads join;
And greatly ſtrives to bid the diſcord ceaſe,
By proffer d compacts of perpetual peace.

His eldeſt hope, young Rocha, at his call,
Leaves the deep confines of the temple wall;
In whoſe fair form, in lucid garments dreſt,
Began the ſacred function of the prieſt.

In early youth, ere yet the genial ſun
Had twice ſix changes o'er his childhood run,
The blooming prince, beneath his parents' hand,
Learn'd all the laws that ſway'd the ſacred land;
With rites myſterious* ſerved the Power divine,
Prepared the altar and adorn'd the ſhrine,

* The high prieſt of the Sun was always one of the royal family; and, in every generation after the firſt, was brother to the king. This office probably began with Rocha, as he was the firſt who was capable of receiving it, and as it was neceſſary, in the education of the prince, that he ſhould be initiated in the ſacred myſteries.

Reſponſive hail'd, with ſtill returning praiſe,
Each circling ſeaſon that the God diſplays,
Sooth'd with funereal hymns the parting dead,
At nuptial feaſts the joyful chorus led;
While evening incenſe and the morning ſong
Roſe from his hand or trembled on his tongue.
Thus, form'd for empire, ere he gain'd the ſway;
To rule with reverence and with power obey,
Reflect the glories of the parent Sun,
And ſhine the Capac of his future throne,
Employ'd his ripening years; till now, from far,
The diſtant fields proclaim approaching war;
Inſpired for active ſcenes he quits the ſhrine,
To aid the council or in arms to ſhine.
Where the mild monarch courtly throngs encloſe,
Sublime in modeſt majeſty he roſe,
With reverence bow'd, conſpicuous o'er the reſt,
Approach'd the throne and thus the ſire addreſs'd:
Great king of nations, heaven-deſcended ſage,
Guard of my youth and glory of my age,
Theſe pontiff robes, to my bleſt brother's hand
Glad I reſign, and wait thy kind command.
Should war invade, permit thy ſon to wield
The ſhaft of vengeance through the untempted field:
Led by thy powerful arm, my ſoul ſhall brave
The haughtieſt foe, or find a glorious grave;
While our bold ranks a nobler toil demand,
In one dread field o'erwhelm the brutal band,

Pour to the mountain gods their wonted food,
And ſhield thy realms from future ſcenes of blood.
Yet oh, may ſovereign mercy firſt ordain
Propounded compact to the ſavage train.
Fearleſs of foes, their own dark wilds I'll trace,
To quell the rage and give the terms of peace,
Teach the grim race to bow beneath thy ſway,
And taſte the bleſſings of the Power of day.

The ſire return'd; My earlieſt wiſh you know,
To ſhield from ſlaughter and preſerve the foe,
In bands of mutual peace all tribes to bind,
And live the friend and guardian of mankind.
Should ſtrife begin, thy youthful arm ſhall ſhare,
The toils of glory through the walks of war;
But o'er thoſe hideous hills, thro' climes of ſnow,
With reaſon's voice to lure the ſavage foe,
To 'ſcape their ſnares, their jarring ſouls combine,
Claims hardier limbs and riper years than thine.
Yet one of heavenly race the taſk requires,
Whoſe myſtic rites controul the etherial fires;
So the ſooth'd Godhead proves to faithleſs eyes,
His ſway on earth and empire of the ſkies.
Some veteran chief, in thoſe rough labours try'd,
Shall aid the toil, and go thy faithful guide;
O'er dreary heights thy ſinking limbs ſuſtain,
Teach the dark wiles of each inſidious train,
Through all extremes of life thy voice attend,
In counſel lead thee or in arms defend.

While three firm youths, thy choſen friends, ſhall go
To learn the climes and meditate the foe;
That wars of future years their aid may find,
To ſerve the realm and ſave the ſavage kind.
Riſe then, my ſon, bright partner of my fame,
With early toils to build thy ſacred name;
In high beheſt, theſe heavenly tidings bear,
To bleſs mankind and ward the waſte of war.
To thoſe dark hoſts, where ſhivering mountains run,
Proclaim the bounties of our ſire the Sun.
On theſe fair plains, beneath his happier ſkies,
Tell how his fruits in boundleſs plenty riſe;
How the bright Power, whoſe all delighting ſoul
Taught round the courts of heaven his ſtars to roll,
To all his earth-born ſons hath kindly given
His nobleſt laws the favourite grace of heaven;
Bids every tribe the ſame glad laws attend,
His realms to widen and his fanes defend,
Confeſs and emulate his bounteous ſway,
And give his bleſſings where he gives the day.
Yet, ſhould the gathering legions ſtill prepare
The ſhaft of ſlaughter for the barbarous war,
Tell them we know to tread the crimſon plain,
And heaven's bright children never yield to man.
But oh, my child, with ſteps of caution go,
The ways are hideous and enraged the foe;
Blood ſtains their altars, all their feaſts are blood,
Death their delight and Darkneſs reigns their God;

Tygers and vultures, ſtorms and earthquakes ſhare
Their rites of worſhip and their ſpoils of war.
Should'ſt thou, my Rocha, tempt their vengeful ire,
Should thoſe dear relics feed a ſavage fire,
Deep ſighs would heave thy wretched mother's breaſt,
The pale ſun ſink in clouds of darkneſs dreſt,
Thy ſire and hapleſs nations rue the day,
That drew thy ſteps from theſe ſad walls away.
Yet go; 'tis virtue calls; and realms unknown,
By theſe long toils, may bleſs thy future throne;
Millions of unborn ſouls in time may ſee
Their doom reverſed, and owe their joys to thee;
While ſavage ſires, with murdering hands, no more
Dread the grim Gods that claim their children's gore,
But, ſway'd by happier ſceptres, here behold
The rites of freedom and the ſhrines of gold.
Be wiſe, be mindful of thy realm and throne;
Heaven ſpeed the labours, and preſerve my ſon.
Soon the glad prince, in robes of white array'd,
Call'd his attendants, and the ſire obey'd.
A diamond broad, in burning gold impreſt,
Fix'd the Sun's image on his royal breaſt;
Fair in his hand appear'd the olive bough,
And the white lautu* graced his beauteous brow.
Swift o'er the hills that lift the walks of day,
Thro' parting clouds he took his eaſtern way;

* The lautu was a cotton fringe, worn by the Incas, as a badge of royalty.

Height over height he gain'd, beyond the bound,
Where the wide empire claims its utmoſt round;
To numerous tribes proclaim'd the ſolar ſway,
And held, through various toils, his wilder'd way.
At length, far diſtant, thro' the darkening ſkies,
Where hills o'er hills in rude diſorder riſe,
A dreadful groan, beneath the ſhuddering ground,
Rolls down the ſteeps and ſhakes the world around.
Columns of reddening ſmoke, above the height,
O'ercaſt the heavens and cloud their wonted light;
From tottering tops deſcend the cliffs of ſnow,
The mountains reel, the valleys rend below,
The headlong ſtreams forget their uſual round,
And ſhrink and vaniſh in the gaping ground;
The ſun deſcends—Wide flames with livid glare
Break the red cloud and purple all the air;
Above the gaping top, wild cinders, driven,
Stream high and brighten to the midſt of heaven;
Deep from beneath, full floods of boiling ore
Burſt the dread mount, and thro' the opening roar;
Torrents of molten rocks, on every ſide,
Lead o'er the ſhelves of ice the fiery tide;
Hills ſlide before them, ſkies around them burn,
Towns ſink beneath, and heaving plains o'erturn;
O'er diſtant realms, the flaming deluge, hurl'd,
Sweeps trembling nations from the aſtoniſh'd world.
Meanwhile, at diſtance, through the livid light,
A buſy concourſe met his wondering ſight;

The prince drew near; an altar raiſed he view'd,
In form a furnace, fill'd with burning wood;
There a fair youth in pangs expiring lay,
And the fond father thus was heard to pray.
*Receive, O dreadful Power, from feeble age,
This laſt pure offering to thy fateleſs rage,
Thrice has thy vengeance, on this hated land,
Claim'd a dear infant from my yielding hand;
Thrice have thoſe lovely lips the victim preſs'd,
And all the mother torn that tender breaſt;
When the dread duty ſtifled every ſigh,
And not a tear eſcaped her beauteous eye.
The fourth, and laſt now meets the fatal doom,
(Groan not, my child, thy God commands thee home)
Attend, once more, thou dark, infernal Name,
From yon far-ſtreaming pyramid of flame;
Snatch, from the heaving fleſh, the expiring breath,
Sacred to thee and all the Powers of death;
Then, in thy hall, with ſpoils of nations crown'd,
Confine thy walks beneath the rending ground;
No more on earth the imbowel'd flames to pour,
And ſcourge my people and my race no more.
Thus Rocha heard; and, tow'rd th'trembling croud,
Turn'd the bright enſign of his beaming God.

* It is a fact, that the different tribes of thoſe mountain ſavages worſhipped the various objects of terror that infeſted the particular parts of the country where they dwelt; ſuch as ſtorms, volcanoes, rivers, lakes; and ſeveral beaſts and birds of prey; and all with this idea, that their forefathers deſcended from the gods which they worſhipped.

The afflicted chief, with fear and grief oppreſt,
Beheld the ſign and thus the prince addreſs'd.
From what far land, O royal ſtranger, ſay,
Aſcend thy wandering ſteps this nightly way?
Com'ſt thou from plains like ours, with cinders fired?
And have thy people in the flames expired?
Or haſt thou now, to ſtay the whelming flood,
No ſon to offer to the furious God?
From happier lands I came, the prince return'd,
Where no red vengeance e'er the concave burn'd;
No furious God diſturbs the peaceful ſkies,
Nor yield our hands the bloody ſacrifice.
But life and joy the Power delights to give,
And bids his children but rejoice and live.
Thou ſeeſt o'er heaven the all-delighting Sun,
In living radiance, rear his golden throne;
O'er plains and valleys ſhed his genial beams,
Call from yon cliffs of ice the winding ſtreams;
While fruits and flowers adorn the indulgent field,
And ſeas and lakes their copious treaſures yield;
He reigns our only God; in him we trace
The friend, the father of our happy race.
Late the lone tribes, on thoſe delightful ſhores,
With gloomy reverence ſerved imagin'd Powers;
Till he, in pity to the roving race, [peace.
Diſpenſed their laws, and form'd their minds for
My heaven-born parents firſt the reign began,
Sent from his courts to rule the race of man,

Unfold his arts, extend his bounteous ſway,
And give his bleſſings where he gives the day.
The wondering chief reply'd; thy form and dreſs
Proclaim thy lineage of ſuperior race;
And our far-diſtant ſires, no leſs than thine,
Sprang from a God, and own a birth divine.
From that etherial mount, the ſource of flame,
In elder times, the great avengers came;
Where the dread Power conceals his dark abode,
And claims, as now, the tribute of a God.
This victim due when willing mortals pay,
His terrors leſſen and his fires decay;
While purer fleet regales the untainted air,
And our glad hoſts are fired for fiercer war.
Yet know, dread chief, the pious youth rejoin'd,
One ſovereign Power produced all human kind;
Some Sire ſupreme, whoſe ever-ruling ſoul
Creates, preſerves, and regulates the whole.
That Sire ſupreme muſt lift his radiant eye
Round the wide concave of the boundleſs ſky;
That heaven's high courts, and all the walks of men
May riſe unveil'd beneath his careful ken.
Could thy dark Power, that holds his drear abode
Deep in the boſom of that fiery flood,
Yield the glad fruits that diſtant nations find?
Or praiſe, or puniſh, or behold mankind?
When the bleſt God, from glooms of changing night
Shall gild his chambers with the morning light,

By myſtic rites he'll vindicate his throne,
And own thy ſervant for his duteous ſon.
Meantime, the chief reply'd, thy cares releaſed,
Share the poor relics of our ſcanty feaſt;
Which, driven in haſty rout our train ſupply'd,
When trembling earth proclaim'd the boiling tide.
They fared, they reſted; till approaching morn
Beheld the day-ſtar o'er the mountain burn;
The riſing prince an altar rear'd on high.
And watch'd the ſplendors of the orient ſky.
When o'er the mountain flamed the ſun's broad ray,
He call'd the hoſt his ſacred rites t' eſſay;
Then took the loaves of maize, the bounties brake,
Gave to the chief and bade them all partake;
The hallowed relics on the pile he placed,
With tufts of flowers the ſimple offering graced,
Held to the ſun the image from his breaſt,
Whoſe glowing concave all the God expreſt;
O'er the dry'd leaves, the trembling luſtre flies,
And thus his voice aſcends the liſtening ſkies.
O thou, whoſe ſplendors kindle heaven with fire,
Great ſoul of nature, and the world's dread ſire,
If e'er my father found thy ſovereign grace,
Or thy bleſt will ordain'd the Incan race,
Give theſe lone tribes to learn thine awful name,
Receive this offering and the pile inflame:
So ſhall thy laws o'er theſe wide bounds be known,
And earth's unnumber'd ſons be happy as thine own.

Thus pray'd the prince, the kindling flames aſpire,
The tribes ſurrounding tremble and retire,
Gaze on the wonder, full conviction own,
And vow obedience to the genial Sun.
The Inca now his farther courſe deſcry'd,
A young cazique attending as a guide,
O'er eaſtern cliffs purſued the wilder'd way,
Where loftier champaigns meet the ſhivering day;
Saw timorous tribes in theſe ſublime abodes,
Adore the blaſts and turn the ſtorms to Gods.
Each blackening cloud, that thunders thro' the ſkies,
Claims from their hands a human ſacrifice.
A while the youth, their better faith to gain,
Strives, with his uſual art, but ſtrives in vain;
In vain he pleads the mildneſs of the ſun,
In thoſe cold bounds where chilling whirlwinds run;
Where the dark tempeſts ſweep the world below,
And load the mountains with eternal ſnow.
The ſun's bright beam, the fearful tribes declare,
Drives all their evils on the tortured air;
He draws the vapors up the eaſtern ſky,
That ſail and centre tow'rd his dazzling eye;
Leads the loud ſtorms along his midday courſe,
And bids the Andes meet their ſweeping force;
Builds their bleak ſummits, with an icy throne,
To ſhine through heaven a ſemblance of his own;
Hence the dire chills, the lifted lawns that wait,
And all the ſcourges that attend their ſtate,

Seven toilſome days, the virtuous legate ſtrove,
To ſocial joys their ſavage minds to move;
Then, while the morning glow'd ſerenely bright,
He led their footſteps to an eaſtern height;
The world unbounded, ſtretch'd beneath them, lay,
And not a cloud obſcured the riſing day.
Broad Amazonia, with her ſtar-like ſtreams,
In azure dreſt, a heaven inverted ſeems:
Dim Paraguay extends the aching ſight;
*Xaraya glimmers, like the moon of night:
The earth and ſkies, in blending borders, ſtray,
And ſmile and brighten to the lamp of day.
When thus the prince; What majeſty divine!
What robes of gold! what flames around him ſhine!
There walks the God! his ſtarry ſons on high
Draw their dim veil, and ſhrink behind the ſky;
Earth with ſurrounding nature 's born anew,
And tribes and empires greet the gladdening view
Who can behold his all-delightingſoul
Give life and joy; and heaven and earth controul?
Bid death and darkneſs from his preſence move—
Who can behold, and not adore and love?
Thoſe plains, immenſely circling feel his beams,
He greens the groves, he ſilvers o'er the ſtreams,
Swells the wild fruitage, gives the beaſt his food,
And mute creation hails the genial God.

* Xaraya is a large lake in the country of Paraguay; and if the ſource of the river Paraguay.

But nobler joys his righteous laws impart,
To aid the life and mould the ſocial heart,
His peaceful arts o'er happy realms to ſpread,
And altars grace with pure celeſtial bread;
Such our diſtinguiſh'd lot, who own his ſway,
Mild as his morning ſtars, and liberal as the day.
His unknown laws, the mountain chief reply'd,
In your far world, your boaſted race may guide;
And yon low plains, that drink his genial ray,
At his glad ſhrine their juſt devotions pay,
But we, nor fear his frown, nor truſt his ſmile;
He blaſts our foreſts and o'erturns our toil;
Our bowers are bury'd in his whirls of ſnow,
Or ſwept and driven to ſhade his tribes below.
Even now his mounting ſteps thy hopes beguile;
He lures thy raptures with a morning ſmile
But ſoon (for ſo thoſe ſaffron robes proclaim)
Black ſtorms ſhall ſail beneath his leading flame,
Thunders and blaſts, againſt the mountain driven,
Shall ſhake the tottering tops & rend the vault of heaven.
He ſpoke; they waited, till the aſcending ray,
High from the noon-tide, ſhot the faithleſs day;
When, lo! far-gathering, round the eaſtern ſkies
Solemn, and low, the dark-red vapors riſe;
Full clouds convolving on the turbid air,
Move, like an ocean to the watery war.
The hoſt, ſecurely raiſed, no dangers harm,
They ſit unclouded, and over-look the ſtorm;

While, far beneath, the ſky-borne waters ride,
O'er the dark deep and up the mountain's ſide;
The lightning's glancing wings, in fury curl'd,
Bend their long forky terrors o'er the world;
Torrents and broken craggs, and floods of rain,
From ſteep to ſteep, roll down their force amain,
In dreadful cataracts: the craſhing ſound [ground.
Fills the wide heavens and rocks the ſmouldering
The blaſts, unburden'd, take their upward courſe.
And, o'er the mountain-top, reſume their force;
Swift, thro' the long, white ridges, from the north,
The rapid whirlwinds lead their terrors forth;
High rolls the ſtorm, the circling ſurges riſe,
And wild gyrations wheel the hovering ſkies;
Vaſt hills of ſnow, in ſweeping columns driven,
Deluge the air and cloud the face of heaven;
Floods burſt their chains, the rocks forget their place,
And the firm mountain trembles to its baſe.

Long gazed the hoſt; when thus the ſtubborn chief,
With eyes on fire, and fill'd with ſullen grief,
Behold thy careleſs God, ſecurely high,
Laughs at our woes, and ſails the heavens in joy;
Drives all his evils on theſe ſeats ſublime,
And wafts his favours to a happier clime:
Sire of that peaceful race, thy words diſcloſe,
There glads his children, here afflicts his foes.
Hence! ſpeed thy courſe! purſue him where he leads;
Leſt vengeance ſeize thee for thy father's deeds,

Thy immolated limbs aſſwage the fire
Of thoſe curſt Powers, which now a gift require.
The youth, in haſte, collects his ſcanty train,
And, with the ſun, flies o'er the weſtern plain,
The fading orb with plaintive voice he plies,
To guide his ſteps and light him down the ſkies.
So, when the moon and all the hoſt of even,
Hang, pale and trembling, on the verge of heaven,
While ſtorms, aſcending, threat their nightly reign,
They ſeek their abſent ſire, and ſettle down the main.
Now, to the ſouth, he turns his tedious way,
Where tribes unnumber'd on the mountains ſtray;
And finds, collecting, in a central plain,
From all the hills, a wide-extended train.
Of various dreſs and various form they ſhow'd;
Each wore the enſign of his local God.
From eaſtern ſteeps, a griſly hoſt deſcends,
O'er whoſe grim chief a tyger's hide depends:
The tuſky jaws grin o'er his ſhaggy brow,
The eye-balls glare, the paws depend below;
From his bored ears contorted ſerpents hung,
And drops of gore ſeem'd rolling on his tongue.
From northern wilds, dark move the vulture-race:
Black tufts of quills their ſhaded foreheads grace;
The claws extend, the beak is oped for blood,
And all the armour imitates the God.
The *condor, frowning, from a ſouthern plain,
Borne on a ſtandard, leads a numerous train:

* The Condor is ſuppoſed to be the largeſt bird in the world. His wings, from one extreme to the other, are ſaid to meaſure twenty-four feet; and he is able to carry a man in his clutches.

Clench'd in his talons, hangs a warrior dead,
His long beak pointing where the ſquadrons tread;
His wings, far-ſtretching, cleave the whiſtling wind.
And his broad tail o'erſhades the hoſt behind.
From other plains, and other hills, afar,
The aſſembling tribes throng dreadful to the war;
Some wear the creſted furies of the ſnake,
Some ſhow the emblems of a ſtream or lake;
All, from the Power they ſerve, aſſume their mode,
And foam and yell to taſte the Incan blood.
The prince, incautious, with his train drew near,
Known for an Inca by his dreſs and air.
Sudden the ſavage bands to vengeance move,
Demand their arms and chace them round the grove;
His ſcattering hoſt in vain the combat tries,
While circling thouſands from their ambuſh riſe;
Nor power to ſtrive, nor hope of flight remains,
They bow in ſilence to the victor's chains.
When, now the gathering ſquadrons throng the plain,
And echoing ſkies the rending ſhouts retain;
Zamor, the leader of the tyger-band,
By choice appointed to the firſt command,
Shrugg'd up his ſpotted ſpoils above the reſt,
And, grimly frowning, thus the croud addreſs'd:
Warriors, attend; tomorrow leads abroad
Our ſacred vengeance for our brothers' blood.
On thoſe ſcorch'd plains forever muſt they lie,
Their bones ſtill naked to the burning ſky?

Left in the field for foreign hawks to tear,
Nor our own vultures can the banquet ſhare.
But ſoon, ye mountain Gods, yon dreary weſt
Shall ſate your vengeance with a nobler feaſt;
When the proud Sun, that terror of the plain,
Shall grieve in heaven for all his children ſlain;
O'er boundleſs fields our ſlaughtering myriads roam,
And your dark Powers command a happier home.
Mean while, ye tribes, theſe men of ſolar race,
Food for the flames, your bloody rites ſhall grace:
Each to a different God, his panting breath
Reſigns in fire; this night demands their death:
All but the Inca; him, reſerved in ſtate,
Theſe conquering hands ere long ſhall immolate,
To that dread Power that thunders in the ſkies,
A grateful gift, before his mother's eyes,
The ſavage ceaſed; the chiefs of every race
Lead the bold captives to their deſtined place;
The ſun deſcends, the parting day expires,
And earth and heaven diſplay their ſparkling fires.
Soon the raiſed altars kindle round the gloom,
And call the victims to the vengeful doom;
Led to the ſcene, in ſovereign pomp they tread,
And ſing, by turns, the triumphs of the dead.
Amid the croud, beſide his altar, ſtood
The youth devoted to the tyger-God.
A beauteous form he roſe, of princely grace,
The only hope of his illuſtrious race;

His aged ſire, through numerous years, had ſhone,
The firſt ſupporter of the Incan throne;
Wiſe Capac loved the youth, and graced his hand
With a fair virgin, from a neighbouring band;
And him the joyous prince, in equal prime;
Had choſe t' attend him round the ſavage clime.
He mounts the pyre; the flames approach his breath,
And thus he wakes the canticle of death.
O thou dark vault of heaven! his daily throne.
Where flee the abſent glories of the Sun?
Ye ſtarry hoſts, that kindle from his eye,
Can you behold him in the weſtern ſky?
Or if, unſeen, he reſts his radiant head,
Beneath the confines of his watery bed;
When next his morning ſteps your courts inflame,
And ſeek on earth for young Azonto's name,
Then point theſe aſhes, mark the ſmoky pile,
And ſay the hero ſuffer'd with a ſmile.
So ſhall the avenging Power, in fury dreſt,
Bind the red circlet o'er his changing veſt,
Bid dire deſtruction, on theſe dark abodes,
Whelm the grim tribes and all their ſavage Gods.
But oh! forbear to tell my ſtooping ſire,
His darling hopes have fed a coward fire;
Why ſhould he know the tortures of the brave?
Or fruitleſs ſorrows bend him to the grave?
And may'ſt thou ne'er be told, my anxious fair,
What rending pangs theſe panting vitals tear;

But, blooming ſtill, the impatient wiſh employ
On the blind hope of future ſcenes of joy.
Now haſte, ye ſtrides of death, the Power of day,
In abſent ſlumbers, gives your vengeance way;
While fainter light theſe livid flames ſupply,
And ſhort-lived thouſands learn of me to die.

He ceaſed not ſpeaking; when the yell of was
Drowns all their death-ſongs in a hideous jar;
Round the far echoing hills the yellings pour,
And wolves and tygers catch the diſtant roar.
Now more concordant all their voices join,
And round the plain they form the lengthening line;
When, to the muſic of the diſmal din,
Indignant Zamor bids the dance begin.
Dim, thro' the ſhadowy fires, each changing form
Moves like a cloud before an evening ſtorm;
When, o'er the moon's pale face and ſtarry plain,
The ſhades of heaven lead on their broken train;
The mingling tribes their mazy circles tread,
Till the laſt groan proclaims the victims dead;
Then part the ſmoky fleſh, enjoy the feaſt,
And loſe their labours in oblivious reſt.

Now, when the weſtern hills proclaim'd the morn,
And falling fires were ſcarcely ſeen to burn,
Grimm'd by the horrors of the dreadful night,
The hoſts woke fiercer for the diſtant fight;
And, dark and ſilent, like a ſhadowy grove,
The different tribes beneath their ſtandards move-

But round the bliſsful city of the ſun,
Since the young prince his foreign toils begun,
The prudent king collected, from afar,
His numerous hoſts to meet the expected war.
The various tribes, in one extended train,
Move to the confines of an eaſtern plain;
Where, from the exalted kingdom's utmoſt end,
Sublimer hills and ſavage walks aſcend.
High in the front, imperial Capac ſtrode,
In fair effulgence like the beaming God;
A golden girdle bound his ſnowy veſt,
A mimic Sun hung trembling on his breaſt,
The lautu's circling band his temples twined,
The bow, the quiver ſhade his waiſt behind;
Raiſed high in air, his golden ſceptre burn'd,
And hoſts ſurrounding trembled as he turn'd.
O'er eaſtern hills he caſt his kindling eye,
Where opening breaches lengthen down the ſky;
In whoſe blue clefts, wide, ſloping alleys bend,
Where annual floods from melting ſnows deſcend;
Now, dry and deep, far up the dreary height,
Show the dark ſquadrons moving into ſight;
They throng and thicken on the ſmoky air,
And every breach pours down the duſky war.
So when an hundred ſtreams explore their way,
Down the ſame ſlopes, convolving to the ſea;
They boil, they bend, they urge their force amain,
Swell o'er th' obſtructing craggs and ſweep the diſtant plain.

Capac beholds, and waits the coming ſhock,
Unmoved, and gleaming like an icy rock;
And while for fight the arming hoſts prepare,
Thus thro' the files he breathes the ſoul of war.
Ye hoſts, of every tribe and every plain,
That live and flouriſh in my father's reign,
Long have your flocks and ripening harveſts ſhown
The genial ſmiles of his indulgent throne;
As o'er ſurrounding realms his bleſſings flow'd,
And conquer'd all without the ſtain of blood.
But now, behold yon wide-collecting band,
With threatening war, demands the happy land:
Beneath the dark, immeaſurable hoſt,
Deſcending, ſwarming, how the craggs are loſt!
Already now, their ravening eyes behold
Your ſtar-bright temples and your gates of gold;
And to their Gods in fancied goblets pour,
The warm libation of your children's gore.
Move then to vengeance, meet the whelming flood,
Led by this arm and lighted by that God;
The ſtrife is fierce, your fanes and fields the prize,
The warrior conquers or the infant dies.
Fill'd with his fire, the hoſts, in ſquared array,
Eye the dark legions and demand the affray;
Their pointed arrows, riſing on the bow,
Look up the ſky and chide the lagging foe.
Fierce Zamor, frowning, leads the griſly train,
Moves from the clefts, and ſtretches o'er the plain;

He gives the ſhriek; the deep convulſing ſound
The hoſts re-echo; and the hills around
Retain the rending tumult; all the air
Clangs in the conflict of the claſhing war.
But firm, undaunted, as a ſhelvy ſtrand,
That meets the billowy ſurge, the ſquadrons ſtand;
Bend the broad bow, in lengthier circuit ſpread,
And ſhowers of arrows thicken heaven with ſhade.
When each grim hoſt, in cloſer conflict join'd,
Clench the dire ax, and caſt the bow behind;
Thro' broken ranks ſweep wide the rapid courſe,
Now ſtruggle back, now ſidelong ſway the force;
Here, from grim chiefs is lopp'd the griſly head;
All gride the dying, all deface the dead;
There, ſcattering o'er the field, in thin array,
Man ſtrives with man, and ſtones with axes play;
With broken ſhafts they follow and they fly,
And yells and groans and ſhouts invade the ſky;
Round all the plains and groves, the ground is ſtrow'd
With ſever'd limbs and corſes bathed in blood.
Long raged the ſtrife; and where, on either ſide,
A friend, a father or a brother died,
No trace remain'd of what he ſhow'd before.
Mangled with horrid wounds and ſmear'd with gore.
Now the Peruvians, in collected might,
With one wide ſweep had wing'd the ſavage flight;
But heaven's bright Splendor in his midday race,
With glooms unuſual, veil'd his radiant face.

By ſlow degrees a ſolemn twilight moves, [groves.
Browns the dim heavens and ſhades the conſcious
The obſerving Inca views, with wild ſurpriſe,
Deep glooms on earth, no cloud around the ſkies;
His hoſt o'erſhaded in the field of blood,
Gored by his foes, deſerted by his God.
All mute with wonder, ceaſe the ſtrife to wage,
Gaze at each-other, and forget their rage;
When pious Capac, to the liſtening croud,
Raiſed high his wand and pour'd his voice aloud:
Ye chiefs and warriors of Peruvian race,
Some dire offence obſcures my father's face;
What moves the Godhead to deſert the plain,
Nor ſave his children, nor behold them ſlain?
Fly! ſpeed your courſe, and ſeek the diſtant town,
Ere darkneſs ſhroud you in a deeper frown;
The lengthening walls your ſquadrons ſhall defend,
While my ſad ſteps the ſacred dome aſcend;
There learn the cauſe, and ward the woes we fear—
Haſte, haſte, my ſons, I guard the flying rear.
The hero ſpoke; the trembling tribes obey,
While deeper glooms obſcure the ſource of day.
Sudden, the ſavage bands collect amain,
Hang on the rear and ſweep them o'er the plain;
Their ſhouts, redoubling o'er the flying war,
Drown the loud groans and torture all the air;
The hawks of heaven, that o'er the field had ſtood
Scared by the tumult from the ſcent of blood,

Cleave the far gloom, the beaſts forget their prey,
And ſcour the waſte, and give the war its way.
Zamor, elate with horrid joy, beheld
The Sun depart, his children fly the field,
And raiſed his rending voice; Thou darkening ſky,
Deepen thy glooms, the Power of death is nigh;
Behold him riſing from his nightly throne,
To veil the heavens and drive the conquer'd Sun!
The glaring Godhead yields to ſacred Night;
And all his armies imitate his flight.
O dark, infernal Power, confirm thy reign;
Give deadlier ſhades and heap the piles of ſlain:
Soon, the young captive prince ſhall roll in fire,
And all his race accumulate the pyre.
Ye mountain vultures, here your vengeance pour,
Tygers and condors, all ye Gods of gore,
In theſe dread fields, beneath your frowning ſky,
A plenteous feaſt ſhall every God ſupply.
Ruſh forward, warriors, hide the plains with dead;
'Twas here our friends, in former combat, bled;
Strow'd thro' the waſte, their bloody bones demand
This ſweeping vengeance from our conquering hand.
He ſaid; and, high before the tyger-train,
With longer ſtrides, hangs forward o'er the ſlain,
Bends, like a falling tree, to reach the foe,
And o'er tall Capac aims a deadly blow.
The king beheld the ax, and with his wand,
Struck the raiſed weapon from his graſping hand

Then clench'd the falling helve, and whirling round,
Fell'd furious hoſts of heroes to the ground:
Nor ſtay'd, but follow'd, where the ſquadrons run,
Fearing to fight, forſaken by the Sun:
Till Cuſco's walls ſalute their longing ſight,
And the wide gates receive their rapid flight.
The folds are barr'd, the foes, in ſhade conceal'd,
Like howling wolves, rave round the affrighted field.
The monarch now aſcends the ſacred dome,
Where the Sun's image wore a faded gloom.
Thro' all the courts a ſolemn ſhade prevail'd,
And diſmal groans his liſtening ear aſſail'd;
Deep from an inner ſhrine, the ſtifled ſighs
Breathe forth awhile, and theſe ſad accents riſe.
Was it for this, my ſon to diſtant lands
Muſt trace the wilds, amid thoſe ſavage bands?
And does the God obſcure his golden throne,
In mournful ſilence for my ſlaughter'd ſon?
Oh, had his beam, ere that diſaſtrous day,
That ſnatch'd the youth from theſe fond arms away,
Received my mounting ſpirit to the ſky,
That ſad Oella might have ſeen him die.
Where ſlept thy ſhaft of vengeance, O my God,
When thoſe fell tygers drank his ſacred blood?
Did not the pious prince, with rites divine;
Feed the pure flame, within thy hallow'd ſhrine?
And early learn, beneath his father's hand,
To ſhed thy bleſſings round the favour'd land?

Form'd by thy laws the royal ſeat to grace,
Son of thy ſon, and glory of his race.
Where, deareſt Rocha, reſts thy beauteous head?
Where the rent robes thy hapleſs mother made?
I ſee thee, mid thoſe hideous hills of ſnow,
Purſued and ſlaughter'd by the ſavage foe;
Or, doom'd a feaſt for ſome infernal God,
Whoſe horrid ſhrine demands thy harmleſs blood.
Snatch me, O Sun, to happier worlds of light——
No ſhroud me, ſhroud me, with thyſelf in night——
Thou hear'ſt me not; thou dread, departed Power,
Thy face is dark, and Rocha is no more.
Thus heard the ſilent king; his heaving heart
Caught all her grief, and bore a father's part.
The cauſe, ſuggeſted by her tender moan,
That veil'd the midday ſplendors of the ſun,
And ſhouts inſulting of the raging foe,
Fix'd him ſuſpenſe, in all the ſtrength of woe.
A doubtful moment held his changing choice;
Now would he ſooth her; half aſſumes his voice;
But greater cares the riſing wiſh controul,
And call forth all his dignity of ſoul.
Why ſhould he ceaſe to ward the coming fate?
Or ſhe be told the foes beſiege the gate?
He turn'd in haſte; and now the image-God,
High in the front, with kindling luſtre glow'd:
Swift thro' the portal, flew the hero's eye,
And hail'd the growing Splendor in the ſky.

The thronging hoſt, now brightening at the ſight,
Pour round the dome, impatient for the fight;
The chief, deſcending, in the portal ſtood,
And thus addreſs'd the all-delighting God.
O ſovereign Soul of heaven; thy changing face
Makes or deſtroys the glory of thy race.
If, from the bounds of earth, my ſon be fled,
Firſt of thy line that ever graced the dead;
If thy bright Godhead ceaſed in heaven to burn,
For that loved youth, who never muſt return;
Forgive thine armies; when, in fields of blood,
They loſe their ſtrength, and fear the frowning God,
As now thy glory, with ſuperior day,
Glows thro' the field and leads the warrior's way,
May our delighted ſouls, to vengeance driven,
Burn with new brightneſs in the cauſe of heaven;
For thy ſlain ſon ſee larger ſquadrons bleed,
We mourn the hero, but avenge the deed.
He ſaid; and, from the battlements on high,
A watchful warrior raiſed an eager cry;
An Inca white on yonder altar tied——
Tis Rocha's ſelf—the flame aſcends his ſide.
In ſweeping haſte the burſting gates unbar,
And flood the champaign with a tide of war;
A cloud of arrows leads the rapid train,
They ſhout, they ſwarm, they hide the moving plain;
The bows and quivers ſtrow the field behind,
And the raiſed axes cleave the parting wind;

The prince, confeſt to every warrior's ſight,
Inſpires each ſoul and centres all the fight;
Each hopes to ſnatch him from the kindling pyre,
Each fears his breath already flits in fire:
While Zamor ſpread his thronging ſquadrons wide,
Wedged like a wall—and thus the king defied:
Haſte! ſon of Light, pour faſt the winged war,
The prince, the dying prince demands your care:
Hear how his death-ſong chides your dull delay,
Lift larger ſtrides, bend forward to the affray;
Ere folding flames prevent his ſtifled groan,
Child of your beaming God, a victim to our own.
He ſaid; and raiſed his ſhaggy form on high,
And bade the ſhafts glide thicker thro' the ſky.
Like the black billows of the lifted main,
Rolls into fight the long Peruvian train;
A white ſail, bounding, on the billows toſt,
Is Capac, ſtriding o'er the furious hoſt.
Now meet the dreadful chiefs, with eyes on fire;
Beneath their blows the parting ranks retire:
In whirlwind-ſweep, their meeting axes bound,
Wheel, craſh in air, and plough the trembling ground;
Their ſinewy limbs, in fierce contortions, bend,
And mutual ſtrokes, with equal force, deſcend;
The king ſways backward from the ſtruggling foe,
Collects new ſtrength, and with a circling blow
Ruſh'd furious on; his flinty edge, on high,
Met Zamor's helve, and glancing, cleft his thigh,

The ſavage fell; when, thro' the tyger-train,
The driving Inca ſwept a widening lane;
Whole ranks fall ſtaggering, where he lifts his arm,
Or roll before him, like a billowy ſtorm;
Behind his ſteps collecting legions cloſe,
While, centred in a circling ridge of foes,
He drives his furious way; the prince unties,
And thus his voice—Dread Sovereign of the ſkies,
Accept my living ſon, again beſtow'd,
To grace with rites the temple of his God.
Move, warriors, move, complete the work begun,
Cruſh the grim race, avenge the injured Sun.
The ſavage hoſt, that view'd the daring deed,
And ſaw deep ſquadrons with their leader bleed,
Raiſed high the ſhriek of horror; all the plain
Is trod with flight and cover'd with the ſlain,
The bold Peruvians circle round the field,
Confine their flight and bid the relics yield:
While Capac raiſed his placid voice again—
Ye conquering hoſts, collect the ſcatter'd train;
The Sun commands to ſtay the rage of war,
He knows to conquer, but he loves to ſpare.
He ceaſed; and, where the ſavage leader lay
Weltering in gore, directs his eager way;
Unwraps the tyger's hide, and ſtrives in vain
To cloſe the wound, and mitigate the pain;
And, while ſoft pity moved his manly breaſt,
Raiſed the huge head and thus the chief addreſt.

Too long, dread prince, thy raging arms withſtood
The hoſts of heaven, and braved the avenging God;
His ſovereign will commands all ſtrife to ceaſe,
His realm is concord, and his pleaſure, peace;
This copious carnage, ſpreading all the plain,
Inſults his bounties, but confirms his reign.
Enough, 'tis paſt—thy parting breath demands
The laſt, ſad office from my yielding hands.
To ſhare thy pains, and feel thy hopeleſs woe,
Are rites ungrateful to a falling foe;
Yet reſt in peace; and know, a chief ſo brave,
When life departs, ſhall find an honour'd grave;
Theſe hands, in mournful pomp, thy tomb ſhall rear,
And tribes unborn thy hapleſs fate declare.
Inſult me not with tombs, the ſavage cried,
Let cloſing clods thy coward carcaſe hide;
But theſe brave bones, unbury'd on the plain,
Touch not with duſt, nor dare with rites profane;
Let no curſt earth conceal this gorey head,
Nor ſongs proclaim the dreadful Zamor dead.
Me, whom the hungry Gods, from plain to plain,
Have follow'd, feaſting on thy ſlaughter'd train,
Me wouldſt thou cover? no! from yonder ſky,
The wide-beak'd hawk, that now beholds me die,
Soon, with his cowering train, my fleſh ſhall tear,
And wolves and tygers vindicate their ſhare.
Receive, dread Powers, (ſince I can ſlay no more)
My laſt glad victim, this devoted gore.

Thus pour'd the vengeful chief his fainting breath,
And loſt his utterance in the gaſp of death.
The ſad remaining tribes confeſs the Power,
That ſheds his bounties round the favourite ſhore;
All bow obedient to the Incan throne,
And bleſt Oella hails her living ſon.

THE VISION OF COLUMBUS.

BOOK IV.

IN one dark age, beneath a ſingle hand,
Thus roſe an empire in the ſavage land.
Her golden ſeats, with following years, increaſe,
Her growing nations ſpread the walks of peace,
Her ſacred rites diſplay the pureſt plan,
That e'er adorn'd the unguided mind of man.
Yet all the pomp, the extended climes unfold,
The fields of verdure and the towers of gold,
Thoſe works of peace, and ſovereign ſcenes of ſtate,
In ſhort-lived glory, haſten to their fate.
Thy followers, ruſhing like an angry flood,
Shall whelm the fields and ſtain the ſhrines in blood;
Nor thou, Las Caſas, beſt of men, ſhalt ſtay
The ravening legions from their guardleſs prey.
Oh! hapleſs prelate, hero, ſaint and ſage,
Doom'd with hard guilt a fruitleſs war to wage,
To ſee, with grief (thy life of virtues run)
A realm unpeopled and a world undone.
While impious Valverde, mock of prieſthood, ſtands,
Guilt in his heart, the goſpel in his hands,

Bids, in one field, unnumber'd ſquadrons bleed,
Smiles o'er the ſcene and ſanctifies the deed.
And thou, brave Gaſca, with thy virtuous train,
Shalt lift the ſword and urge thy power in vain;
Vain, the late taſk, the ſinking land to ſave,
Or call her ſlaughter'd millions from the grave.
The Seraph ſpoke. Columbus, with a ſigh,
Caſt o'er the hapleſs climes his moiſten'd eye,
And thus return'd: Oh, hide me in the tomb;
Why ſhould I live to view the impending doom?
If ſuch dread ſcenes the ſcheme of heaven compoſe,
And virtuous toils induce redoubled woes,
Unfold no more; but grant a kind releaſe,
Give me, 'tis all I aſk, to reſt in peace.
Thy ſoul ſhall reſt in peace, the Power rejoin'd,
Ere theſe conflicting ſhades involve mankind:
But nobler views ſhall firſt thy mind engage,
Beyond the bounds of this deſtructive age;
Where happier fruits of thy unwearied toil,
Thro' future years, and other empires, ſmile.
Europe's contending realms ſhall ſoon behold
Theſe fruitful plains and hills of opening gold,
Fair in the path of thy adventurous ſail,
Their countleſs navies float in every gale,
For wealth and commerce, ſweep the extended ſhore,
And load the ocean with the ſhining ore.
As, up the orient heaven, the dawning ray
Smiles o'er the world and gives the promiſed day;

Drives fraud and rapine from their nightly ſpoil,
And ſocial nature wakes to peaceful toil;
So, from the blazing mine, the golden ſtore,
Mid warring nations, ſpreads from ſhore to ſhore,
With new ambition fires their raviſh'd eyes,
O'er factious nobles bids the monarch riſe;
Unites the force of realms, the wealth to ſhare,
Leads larger hoſts to milder walks of war;
The golden ſcale, while rival ſtates ſuſpend,
And princely powers their mutual aid extend;
Wide o'er the world, while genius unconfined
Tempts happier flights and opens all the mind;
Unbinds the ſlaviſh bands of monkiſh lore,
Awakes the arts and bids the Muſes ſoar.

Then ſhall thy northern climes their charms diſ-
United nations there extend their ſway; [play;
O'er the new world exalt their peerleſs throne,
And twine thy wreaths immortal on their crown.

Now lift thine eye. O'er Europe's circling rounds,
Where kings contending claim their bordering
Behold in light, the nations ſlowly riſe, [bounds,
Like trembling vapours in the morning ſkies.
Where thoſe long ſhores their different courſes run,
Round the dim north, and tow'rd the eaſtern ſun;
The naked harbours, looking to the main,
Unfold their bounds and break the winds in vain;
The labouring ride no foreign treaſure brings,
No floating foreſt waves its canvaſs wings,

No buſy throngs the lonely margin tread,
Nor ſails nor cities caſt a watery ſhade:
Save, where, yon opening gulph the ſtrand divides,
Proud Venice bathes her in the broken tides,
Beholds her ſcattering barks around her ſtrown,
And, ſovereign, deems the watery world her own.
The nations fierce, that local faiths enrage,
In cauſeleſs ſtrife perpetual combat wage.
No martial ſyſtem claims the monarch's care,
Nor ſtanding legions guard the realm from war;
Give general laws to nations, and reſtrain
The untemper'd rage of paſſion's lawleſs reign.
But the firm bondage of the ſlaviſh mind,
Spreads deeper glooms and ſubjugates mankind.
As the dark northern tribes, in elder times,
Drove every art from Europe's cultured climes,
O'er ruin'd Latium fix'd their ſavage reign,
Mid towers o'erturn'd and learned millions ſlain;
Thus, o'er the ſame fair ſeats, with deadlier ſhade,
Folly and zeal their ſable enſigns ſpread,
Send their cowl'd teachers every ſect to blind,
Stretch the deep mantle and ſecure the mind,
Warn from the world, by Gallileo's fate,
Each daring truth that boaſts a modern date,
Support all crimes, by full indulgence given,
Uſurp the power and wield the ſword of Heaven.
But ſee, where future years their ſcenes unroll,
And riſing arts inſpire the venturous ſoul.

Behold, from all the extended coaſts of Spain,
Unnumber'd navies croud the whitening main;
High o'er the weſtern wave, in cloudly flight,
They ſtream and leſſen on the varying ſight,
Dim thro' the iſles and middle regions pour,
Furl the low ſails, and ſkirt the maſted ſhore.
From the long ſtrand the moving loads behold,
The ſparkling gems, and heaps of burning gold.
The ſails aſcend; and, tow'rd their native day,
With heavier burdens win their arduous way.
Now, from all coaſts, that Europe's realms ſurround,
See the long ſquadrons o'er the billows bound;
Thro' Afric's iſles, obſerve the ſweeping ſails,
Full pinions toſſing in Arabian gales;
Indus and Ganges, deep in canvaſs, loſt,
And navies crouding round each orient coaſt;
New nations riſe to light, extend the toil,
Unfold their treaſures, ſhare the foreign ſpoil,
Join diſtant worlds, all climes and oceans brave,
And ſhade with ſheets the immeaſurable wave.
While rival realms in greater works engage,
And wake the genius of a happier age;
Their bounds enlarge, and mutual ſafety ſhare,
By leagues of peace and ſtanding ſtrength of war.
See lofty Ximines, with ſolemn gait,
Move from the cloiſter to the walks of ſtate,
Thro' all the extended baronies of Spain,
Curb the fierce lords, and fix the royal reign.

Behold, dread Charles the ſovereign ſeat aſcends,
O'er kings and climes his eager view extends;
Europe's ſurrounding ſtates, before his eyes,
Lure the wide wiſh and bid his claims ariſe;
While wealthier ſhores, beneath the weſtern day,
Unfold their treaſures and enlarge his ſway.
See the brave Francis lift his banners round,
To guard the realms and give his rival bound;
With equal pomp, the imperial ſceptre claim,
And fire the nations with an equal name,
Unite his kingdom and his power extend,
Of arms the patron, and of arts the friend.
And ſee proud Wolſey riſe, ſecurely great,
Kings in his train, and ſceptres at his feet,
From monkiſh walls, the hoards of wealth he draws,
To aid the tyrant and reſtrain the laws,
Wakes Albion's genius, abler monarchs braves,
And ſhares with them the empire of the waves.
Behold dark Solyman, from eaſtern ſkies,
With his grim hoſt, magnificently riſe:
Extend his limits o'er the midland ſea,
And tow'rd Germania drive his conquering way,
Frown o'er the Chriſtian Powers, with haughty air,
And teach the nations how to lead the war.
There powerful Leo riſes into ſight,
And, generous, calls the finer arts to light;
New walls and ſtructures throng the Latian ſhore
The Pencil triumphs and the Muſes ſoar.

Snatch'd from the ground, where Gothic rage had trod,
And monks and prelates held their drear abode,
The Roman ſtatues riſe; and wake to view
The ſame bold taſte their ancient glory knew.
O'er the dark world Eraſmus caſts his eye;
In ſchoolmen's lore ſees kings and nations lie;
With ſtrength of judgement and with fancy warm,
Derides their follies, and diſſolves the charm,
Draws the deep veil, that bigot zeal has thrown
O'er pagan books, and ſcience long unknown,
From faith of pageant rites relieves mankind,
And ſeats bold virtue in the conſcious mind.
But ſtill the daring taſk, to brave alone
The riſing vengeance of the Papal throne,
Reſtrains his toil: he gives the conteſt o'er, [Power.
And leaves his hardier ſons to dare the threatening
Thus taught the Seer; Columbus turn'd his view,
Where round the regions other wonders drew;
Saw in the north a daring ſage aſcend,
And o'er his form a ſable robe depend;
The Cowl conceal'd his eye; his fearleſs head,
Like morning miſt, a hovering cloud o'erſpread;
Above the gloom, deſcending luſtre beams,
And ſtreaks the concave with cerulean ſtreams.
Sudden the burſting cloud expands in light,
And heaven unfolding fills his raptured ſight.
His changing robes in golden Splendor blaze,
Around his head a ſtarry rainbow plays;

High in his hand a beam of glory burns,
And realms ſurrounding brighten as it turns.
When thus the Power; Theſe happier viſions trace
The deſtined joys that wait the riſing race.
Great Luther moves in that majeſtic frame,
Fair light of heaven, and child of deathleſs fame;
Born, like thyſelf, thro' toils and griefs to wind,
From ſloth and ſlavery free the captive mind,
Brave adverſe Powers, controul the Papal ſway,
And bring benighted nations into day.
The beam of glory, lifted in his hand,
Is Heaven's own word that ſhines on every land;
By his bold pen, in modern ſtyle diſplay'd,
From the glad world, it drives the myſtic ſhade.
See the long crouds, his fame around him brings,
Schools, ſynods, prelates, potentates and kings;
All gaining knowledge from his boundleſs ſtore,
And join'd to ſhield him from the rage of power.
Firſt of the train, ſee Frederic's princely form
Ward from the ſage divine the gathering ſtorm;
In learned Wittemburgh ſecure his ſeat,
Where arts and virtues find a bleſt retreat.
Raiſed by his voice, glad pupils round him ſtand,
Aſſiſt his toils and ſpread to every land.
There moves Melanchton, mild as morning light,
And rage and ſtrife are ſoften'd in his ſight;
In terms ſo gentle flows his tuneful tongue,
Ev'n cloiſter'd bigots join the liſtening throng;

By foes and infidels he lives approved,
By monarchs courted and by heaven beloved.
With ſtern deport, o'er all the circling band,
See Oſiander lift his waving hand;
On others' faults he caſts a haughty frown,
Nor their's will pardon nor perceive his own;
A heart ſincere his open looks unfold,
In virtue faithful, and in action bold.
And lo, where Europe's utmoſt limits bend,
From this mild ſource what various joys deſcend!
A larger policy pervades the whole,
And civil rights inſpire the free-born ſoul.
See haughty Henry, from the Papal tie,
His realms diſmember, and the Power defy;
While Albion's ſons diſdain a foreign throne,
And bravely bound the oppreſſion of his own.
Another ſcene ſtill marks the important age,
And hardier toils adventurous throngs engage.
There ſtarts fierce Loyola, an unknown name,
By paths unſeen to reach the goal of fame;
Thro' courts and camps, by ſecret ſkill, to wind;
To mine whole ſtates and over-reach mankind.
The taſk begins; behold an artful race,
Range thro' the world, and every ſect embrace,
Their creeds, their powers, their policies explore,
And lead an intercourſe from ſhore to ſhore.
See the full throngs, in every diſtant land,
Embrace the cauſe and ſwell the wide command:

In towering pride, aſcending to the ſkies,
Their growing fanes and ſeats of ſcience riſe;
A new-form'd empire gains a ſudden birth,
Built in all empires o'er the peopled earth.
Led, by thy followers, to the weſtern day,
In happier climes, behold their ſovereign ſway,
Where Paraguay's mild nations ſmile in peace,
And generous arts and ſocial joys increaſe.

Thus all the tribes of men, beneath thy view,
Enlarge their walks and nobler toils purſue,
Unwonted deeds, in rival greatneſs, ſhine,
Call'd into life and firſt inſpired by thine.
So, while imperial Homer tunes the lyre,
The living lays unnumber'd bards inſpire,
From realm to realm, the kindling ſpirit flies,
Sounds thro' the earth and echoes to the ſkies.

Now move, in rapid haſte, the years of time,
When, borne afar from this enlighten'd clime,
Thy brighter ſons ſhall croud the weſtern main,
And northern empires bloom beneath their reign.
To ſpeed their courſe, the leaders of the age,
By error darkened and religious rage,
Bid Perſecution whelm in kindred blood,
The walls of peace, and temples of their God:
Millions of martyr'd heroes mount the pyre,
And blind devotion lights the ſacred fire.
Led by the dark inquiſitors of Spain,
See Deſolation mark her dreary reign;

See Jews and Moors, that croud the fatal ſtrand,
Roll in the flames, or flee the hated land.
See, arm'd with power, the ſame tribunal riſe,
Where hapleſs Belgia's fruitful circuit lies;
What wreaths of ſmoke roll heavy round the ſhore!
What ſhrines and altars flow with chriſtian gore!
What diſmal ſhrieks! what agonizing cries!
What prayers are wafted to the liſtening ſkies!
Where the flames open, lo! their arms, in vain,
Reach out for help, diſtorted with the pain!
Till, folded in the fires, they diſappear,
And not a ſound invades the ſtartled ear.
See Philip, throned in inſolence and pride,
Enjoy their wailings and their pangs deride;
While, ſcattering death round Albion's crimſon iſles,
O'er the ſame ſcenes, his cruel conſort ſmiles.
Amid the ſtrife, a like deſtruction reigns,
With wider ſweep, o'er Gallia's fatal plains;
See factious nobles pour the ſlaughtering tide,
Grim death unites whom ſacred creeds divide;
Each dreadful victor bids the flames ariſe,
And waft a thouſand murders to the ſkies.
Now ceaſe the factions, with the Valoiſe line,
And the great Bourbon's liberal virtues ſhine;
Quell'd by his voice, the furious ſects accord,
And diſtant empires tremble at his ſword.
See, ſmiling Albion views, with glad ſurpriſe,
A rival reign, in bleſt Eliza, riſe;

O'er Belgia's plains while daring leaders ſoar,
And brave the vengeance of the Iberian power.
Now from all coaſts, where ſhaded plains extend,
See the bent foreſts to the main deſcend.
From Albion's ſtrand, behold the navies heave,
Stretch in a line and thunder o'er the wave;
There toils brave Ruſſel, maſter of the main,
And moves in triumph o'er the pride of Spain.
The Seraph ſpoke; when fair beneath their eye,
A new-form'd ſquadron roſe along the ſky;
High on the talleſt deck, majeſtic ſhone
Great Raleigh, pointing tow'rd the weſtern ſun;
His eye, bent forward, ardent and ſublime,
Seem'd piercing nature and evolving time;
Beſide him ſtood a globe, whoſe figures traced
A future empire in each wilder'd waſte;
All former works of men behind him ſhone,
Graved by his hand in ever-during ſtone;
On his mild brow, a various crown diſplays
The hero's laurel and the ſcholar's bays;
His graceful limbs in ſteely mail were dreſt,
The bright ſtar burning on his manly breaſt;
His ſword high-beaming, like a waving ſpire,
Illumed the ſhrouds and flaſh'd the ſolar fire;
The ſmiling crew roſe reſolute and brave,
And the glad ſails hung bounding o'er the wave.
Far on the main, they held their rapid flight,
And weſtern coaſts ſalute their longing ſight:

Glad Cheſapeake unfolds a paſſage wide,
And leads their ſtreamers up the freſhening tide;
Where a mild region and delightful ſoil
And groves and ſtreams allure the ſteps of toil.
Here, lodged in peace, they tread the welcome land,
An inſtant harveſt waves beneath their hand,
Spontaneous fruits their eaſy cares beguile,
And opening fields in living culture ſmile.
With joy Columbus view'd; when thus his voice,
Ye beauteous ſhores, and generous hoſts, rejoice.
Here ſtretch the water'd plains and midland tide,
And nature blooms in all her virgin pride;
The years advance, by Heaven's bleſt arm unroll'd,
When the deep wilds their promiſed change behold.
Be thou, my Seer, the people's guardian friend,
Protect their virtues and their lives defend;
May wealth and grandeur, with their arts, unfold,
Yet ſave, oh, ſave them from the thirſt of gold.
May the poor natives, round the guardleſs climes,
Ne'er feel their rage nor groan beneath their crimes;
But learn the various bleſſings, that extend,
Where civil rights and ſocial virtues blend;
In theſe brave leaders find a welcome guide,
And rear their fanes and empires by their ſide.
Smile, happy region, ſmile; the ſtar of morn
Illumes thy heavens, and bids thy day be born;
Thy opening foreſts ſhow the work begun,
Thy plains, unſhaded, drink a purer-ſun;

Unwonted navies on thy currents glide,
And happier treaſures waſt on every tide;
Yield now thy bounties, load the diſtant main;
Give birth to nations and begin thy reign.
The hero ſpoke; when thus the Power rejoin'd,
Approved his joy, and ſtill enlarged his mind:
To thy warm wiſh, beneath theſe opening ſkies,
The pride of earth-born empires ſoon ſhall riſe.
My powerful arm, to which the taſk was given,
On this fair globe to work the will of Heaven;
To rear the mountain, ſpread the ſubject plain,
Lead the long ſtream and roll the billowy main,
In every clime prepared the ſeats of ſtate,
Deſign'd their limits and preſcribed their date.
To meet theſe tides, I ſtretch'd the level ſtrand,
Heaved the green banks and taught the groves to ſtand,
Strow'd the wild fruitage, gave the beaſts their place,
And form'd the region for thy kindred race.
In elder years, when firſt the watery round,
And meeting lands their blending borders found;
Back to thoſe diſtant hills, that range ſublime,
From yon deep gulph, thro' all the northern clime,
The Atlantic wave it's coral kingdoms ſpread,
And ſcaly nations here their gambols led.
By ſlow degrees, thro' following years of time,
I bared theſe realms* and raiſed the extended clime;

* Among the various mutations, which appear to have taken place in different parts of the earth, the formation of the coaſt of

As, from retiring ſeas, the riſing ſand
Stole into light and gently drew to land.
Moved by the winds, that ſweep the flaming zone,
The waves roll weſtward with the conſtant ſun,
Meet the firm Iſthmus, ſcoop that gulphy bed,
Wheel tow'rd the north, and here their currents ſpread:
Thoſe ravaged banks, that move beneath their force,
Borne on the tide and loſt along the courſe,
Have form'd this beauteous ſhore by Heaven deſign'd,
The happieſt empire that awaits mankind.
Think not the luſt of gold ſhall here annoy,
Enſlave the nations and the race deſtroy.
No flaming mine theſe lengthening hills encloſe,
No ruby ripens and no diamond glows;
But richer ſtores and rocks of uſeful mould,
Repay, in wealth, the penury of gold.
Freedom's unconquer'd ſons, with healthy toil,
Shall lop the grove and warm the furrow'd ſoil,

North-America by the gulph ſtream, is one of the moſt remarkable. The riſing of ſand-banks, which are perpetually increaſing along the ſhores of Virginia and the Carolinas—the layers of ſea-ſhells and pieces of wood, which are found at the depth of forty or fifty feet below the ſurface, at the diſtance of a hundred miles from the ſea, in the middle and ſouthern States—the level and uniform appearance of the country, from New-Jerſey to Eaſt-Florida—and the vaſt cavity which appears to have been ſcooped out of the earth, to form the gulph of Mexico, are circumſtances which eſtabliſh the above as an undoubted fact. It is evident, that, not only the iſland of Newfoundland, Cape-Cod, &c. but the greater part of the ſettled country, from the river Delaware to Cape St. Auguſtine, is an accretion of earth worn off from the Iſthmus of Darien, by that ſtrong current of water which follows the trade winds; and, meeting the obſtruction of the Iſthmus, takes a northern direction and ſweeps the coaſt, as far as the river St. Laurence.

From iron ridges break the rugged ore,
Smooth the pale marble, ſpire the bending ſhore;
While ſails and towers and temples round them heave,
Shine o'er the realms and ſhade the diſtant wave.
Nor think the native tribes, theſe wilds that trace,
A foe ſhall find in this exalted race;
In ſouls like theirs, no mean, ungenerous aim
Can ſhade their glories with the deeds of ſhame;
Nor low deceit, weak mortals to enſnare,
Nor bigot zeal to urge the barbarous war;
Nor haughty pomp of power, nor Spaniſh pride,
To ravage realms and nature's laws deride.
From eaſtern tyrants driven, and nobly brave,
To build new ſtates, or ſeek a diſtant grave,
Thy generous ſons, with proffer'd leagues of peace,
Approach theſe climes, and hail the ſavage race;
Pay the juſt purchaſe for the uncultured ſhore,
Diffuſe their arts and ſhare the friendly power;
While the dark tribes in ſocial aid combine,
Exchange their treaſures and their joys refine.
O'er Europe's wilds, when firſt the nations ſpread,
The pride of conqueſt every legion led.
Each powerful chief, by ſervile crouds adored,
O'er conquer'd realms aſſumed the name of lord,
Built the proud caſtle, ranged the ſavage wood,
Fired his grim hoſt to frequent fields of blood,
With new-made honours lured his ſubject bands,
Price of their lives, and purchaſe of their lands;

For names and titles, bade the world reſign
Their faith, their freedom and their rights divine.
Thus haughty baronies their terrors ſpread,
And ſlavery follow'd where the ſtandard led;
Till, little tyrants by the great o'erthrown,
Contending nobles give the regal crown;
Wealth, wiſdom, virtue, every claim of man
Unguarded fall to form the finiſh'd plan:
Ambitious cares, that nature never gave,
Warm the ſtarved peaſant, fire the ſceptred ſlave;
Thro' all degrees, in gradual pomp, aſcend,
Honour, the name, and tyranny, the end.
But nobler honours here the breaſt inflame;
Sublimer views and deeds of happier fame;
A new creation waits the weſtern ſhore,
And reaſon triumphs o'er the pride of power.
As the glad coaſt, by Heaven's ſupreme command,
Won from the wave, preſents a new-form'd land;
Yields richer fruits and ſpreads a kinder ſoil,
And pays with greater ſtores the hand of toil;
So, call'd from ſlaviſh climes, a bolder race,
With ſtatelier ſtep, theſe fair abodes ſhall trace;
Their freeborn ſouls, with genius unconfined,
Nor ſloth can poiſon, nor a tyrant bind;
With ſelf-wrought fame and worth internal bleſt,
No venal ſtar ſhall brighten on the breaſt;
No king-created name or courtly art
Damp the bold thought, or ſway the changing heart.

Above all fraud, beyond all titles great,
Heaven in their ſoul and ſceptres at their feet,
The fires of unborn nations move ſublime,
Look empires thro' and pierce the veil of time,
The fair foundations form, and lead afar
The palm of peace or ſcourge of barbarous war.
Their following ſons the godlike toil behold,
In freedom's cauſe, unconquerably bold,
Complete the toils, diſplay their glories round,
Domeſtic ſtates and diſtant empires bound,
Brave the dread powers, that eaſtern monarchs boaſt,
Explore all climes, enlighten every coaſt;
Till arts and laws, in one great ſyſtem bind,
By leagues of peace, the labours of mankind.
But ſlow proceeds the plan. Long toils remain,
Ere thy bleſt children can begin their reign.
That daring leader, whoſe exalted ſoul
Pervades all ſcenes that unborn realms unroll,
Muſt yield the palm; and, at a courtier's ſhrine,
His fame, his freedom and his life reſign.
That feeble train, the lonely wilds who tread,
Their ſire, their genius in their Raleigh dead,
Shall pine and periſh in the frowning gloom,
Or mount the wave and ſeek their ancient home.
Succeeding hoſts the daring taſk purſue,
The dangers brave and all the ſtriſe renew;
But vain the toil; while void of wealth and power,
Their fleets to furniſh and their claims ſecure;

While kings and courtiers ſtill neglect the plan,
The ſlaves of eaſe and enemies of man.
Till noble Del'ware, with his venturous train,
In ſtrength and fortune, hails the fair domain,
Divides his bounties, aids the patriot cauſe,
Begins the culture and deſigns their laws.
Fired with the great ſucceſs the aſpiring age
Sees greater throngs the glorious toil engage.
Where the long ſtrand unnumber'd ſtreams divide,
Their rival heroes lead their naval pride,
Back from the ports extend a peaceful ſway,
And ſpread their hamlets tow'rd the ſetting day.
From yon low ſhore, where Texel meets the main,
See the toſt navies bear a venturous train;
See, ſcourged by bigot rage from Albion's coaſt,
The noble Baltimore collect his hoſt,
In queſt of freedom ſeek a happier land,
And ſhield and cheriſh his illuſtrious band;
While heaven-taught Penn ſublimely towers along,
And ardent crouds beneath his ſtandard throng;
See, by his ſide, a future city plann'd,
A code of ſtatutes folded in his hand;
Progreſſive years and ages, as they riſe,
Unroll their ſcenes and open to his eyes.
See, from grim Laud, a perſecuted band
Mount the bold bark and flee the fatal ſtrand;
Virtue's unconquer'd, venerable train,
Whom tyrants preſs and waves oppoſe in vain;

While faith and freedom ſpread a nobler charm,
And toils and dangers every boſom warm.
See other hoſts and chiefs, in bright array,
Full pinions crouding on the watery way ;
All from their different ſhores, their ſails unfurl'd,
Point their glad ſtreamers to the weſtern world.

THE VISION OF COLUMBUS.

BOOK V.

COLUMBUS hail'd them with a father's ſmile,
Fruits of his cares and children of his toil;
With tears of joy, while ſtill his eyes deſcried
Their courſe adventurous o'er the diſtant tide.
Thus, when o'er deluged earth her Seraph ſtood,
The toſt ark bounding on the ſhoreleſs flood,
The ſacred treaſure claim'd his guardian view,
While climes unnoticed in the wave withdrew.
He ſaw the ſquadrons reach the riſing ſtrand,
Leap from the wave and ſhare the joyous land;
Receding foreſts yield the heroes room,
And opening wilds with fields and gardens bloom.
Fill'd with the glance extatic, all his ſoul
Now ſeems unbounded with the ſcene to roll,
And now, impatient, with retorted eye,
Perceives his ſtation in another ſky.
Waſt me, O winged Angel, waſt me o'er,
With thoſe bleſt heroes, to the happy ſhore;
There let me live and die—but all appears
A fleeting viſion; theſe are future years.

Yet grant in nearer view the climes may ſpread,
And my glad ſteps may ſeem their walks to tread;
While eaſtern coaſts and kingdoms, wrapp'd in night,
Ariſe no more to intercept the ſight.
The hero ſpoke; the Angel's powerful hand
Moves brightening o'er the viſionary land;
The height, that bore them, ſtill ſublimer grew,
And earth's whole circuit ſettled from their view:
A duſky Deep, ſerene as breathleſs even,
Seem'd vaulting downward, like another heaven;
The ſun, rejoicing on his weſtern way,
Stamp'd his fair image in the inverted day:
Sudden, the northern ſhores again drew nigh,
And life and action fill'd the hero's eye.
Where the dread Laurence breaks his paſſage wide,
Where Miſſiſippi's milder currents glide,
Where midland realms their ſwelling mountainsheave,
And ſlope their champaigns to the diſtant wave,
On the green banks, and o'er the extended plain,
Riſe into ſight the happieſt walks of man.
The placid ports, that break the billowing gales,
Rear their tall maſts and ſtretch their whitening ſails;
The harveſts wave, the groves with fruitage bend,
And bulwarks heave, and ſpiry domes aſcend;
Fair works of peace in growing ſplendor riſe,
And grateful earth repays the bounteous ſkies.
Till war invades; when opening vales diſcloſe,
In moving crouds, the ſavage tribes of foes;

High tufted quills their painted foreheads preſs,
Dark ſpoils of beaſts their ſhaggy ſhoulders dreſs,
The bow bent forward, for the combat ſtrung,
The ax, the quiver on the girdle hung;
The deep, diſcordant yells convulſe the air,
And the wild waſte reſounds approaching war.
The hero look'd; and every darken'd height
Pours down the duſky ſquadrons to the fight.
Where Kennebec's high ſource forſakes the ſky,
Where deep Champlain's extended waters lie,
Where the bold Hudſon leads his ſhadowy tide,
Where Kaatſkill-heights the azure vault divide,
Where the dim Alleganies range ſublime,
And give their ſtreams to every diſtant clime,
The ſwarms deſcended, like an evening ſhade,
And wolves and vultures follow'd where they ſpread.
Thus when a ſtorm, on eaſtern pinions driven,
Meets the firm Andes in the midſt of heaven,
The clouds convulſe, the torrents pour amain,
And the black waters ſweep the ſubject plain.
Thro' cultured fields, the bloody myriads ſpread,
Sack the lone village, ſtrow the ſtreets with dead;
The flames aſpire, the ſmoky volumes riſe,
And ſhrieks and ſhouts redouble round the ſkies;
Fair babes and matrons in their domes expire,
Or burſt their paſſage thro' the folding fire;
O'er woods and plains, promiſcuous rave along
The yelling victors and the driven throng;

The ſtreams run purple; all the extended ſhore
Is wrapp'd in flames and trod with ſteps of gore.
Till numerous hoſts, collecting from afar,
Exalt the ſtandard and oppoſe the war,
Point their loud thunders on the ſhouting foe,
And brave the ſhafted terrors of the bow.
When, like a broken wave, the ſavage train
Lead back the flight and ſcatter o'er the plain,
Slay their weak captives, leave their ſhafts in haſte,
Forget their ſpoils and ſcour the diſtant waſte.
As, when the morning ſun begins his way,
The ſhadows vaniſh where he gives the day;
So the dark tribes, from brighter regions hurl'd,
Sweep o'er the heights and lakes, far thro' the wilder'd world.
Now move in nobler pomp the toils of peace
New temples riſe and ſplendid towers increaſe.
He ſaw, where Penn his peaceful thouſands led,
A ſpreading town bright Del'ware's waves o'erſhade;
The croſſing ſtreets in fair proportion run,
The walls and pavements ſparkle to the ſun.
Like that famed city, roſe the beauteous plan,
Whoſe ſpacious bounds Semiramis began;
Long ages finiſh'd what her hand deſign'd,
The pride of kings and wonder of mankind.
Where labouring Hudſon's glaſſy current ſtrays,
York's growing walls their ſplendid turrets raiſe,
Albania riſing in her midland pride,
Rolls her rich treaſures on his lengthening tide;

Fair in her circling ſtreams bleſt Newport laves,
And Boſton opens o'er the ſubject waves;
On ſouthern ſhores, where happier currents glide,
The banks bloom gay, and cities grace their ſide;
Like morning clouds, that tinge their ſkirts with gold,
Bright Charleſton's roofs and ſparkling ſpires unfold.
Thro' each extended realm, in wiſdom great,
Roſe the dread ſires, that claim the cares of ſtate;
Long robes of pureſt white their forms embrace,
Their better hands imperial ſceptres grace,
Their left the laws, that ſhining leaves infold,
Where rights and charters flame in figured gold.
High on a ſeat, that opening crouds diſcloſe,
Bleſt Baltimore, from toils and dangers, roſe;
The ſacred Croſs, before his kindling eyes,
From foes defended, and of peace the prize,
Waves o'er the hoſt; who catch the liberal flame,
Partake the freedom and extend the fame,
With port majeſtic, riſing to his throne,
Immortal Penn, in rival luſtre ſhone,
Diſpenſing juſtice to the train below,
Peace in his voice and firmneſs on his brow.
Another croud ſees generous Belcher ſtand,
And gains new glory from his liberal hand;
He aids the toil, and ſtill exalts the plan,
Patron of ſcience, liberty and man,
With ſteady ſtep, bold Winthrop towers along,
Waves the bright wand and cheers the noble throng;

Beneath his firm, unalterable ſway,
Fair Virtue reigns, and grateful realms obey.
While other forms, the riſing ſtates around,
By wiſdom graced, with equal honours crown'd,
Trail the long robe, extend the ſceptred hand,
Drive guilt and ſlavery from the joyous land,
Bid arts and culture, wealth and wiſdom riſe,
Friends of mankind and favourites of the ſkies.

Up the wild ſtreams, that bound the hero's view,
Great Gallia's ſons their weſtern courſe purſue;
On fertile banks fair towns and villas roſe,
That dared the vengeance of ſurrounding foes.
Here cold Canadia round her Laurence ſpread,
And raiſed her cities o'er his watery glade;
There Louiſiana's happier borders run,
Spread fairer lawns and feel a purer ſun;
While the glad lakes and broad Ohio's ſtream
Seem ſmiling conſcious of approaching fame.

Now larger barks purſue their rapid courſe,
Unite their labours and extend their force;
Beneath their liſted ſails, ariſe in ſight
White flags diſplay'd and armies robed in white;
Through the deep midland waſte, they ſtream afar,
And threat weak realms with deſolating war.
Where proud Quebec exalts her rocky ſeat,
They range their camp and ſpread the frowning fleet,
Lead conquering legions, weſtern wilds to brave,
Raiſe lone Oſwago o'er the untraverſed wave;

While other ſquadrons tempt another flood,
And dark Ohio ſwells beneath the load.
When, fierce, from Albion's coaſt, a warlike train
Moves o'er the ſea, and treads the duſky plain;
Swift to their aid, from all the crouded ſtrand,
Riſe, bright in arms, the wide colonial band;
They join their force; and, tow'rd the falling day,
The ſame bold banners lead their dreadful way;
O'er Allagany-heights, like ſtreams of fire,
The red flags wave and glittering arms aſpire;
Beyond the hills, where, o'er the lonely flood,
A hoſtile fortreſs ſpreads its bounds abroad,
They bend the venturous march; the hoſt within
Behold their danger, and the ſtrife begin.
From the full burſting gates, the ſweeping train
Pour forth the war and hide the ſounding plain;
The oppoſing ſquadrons, ranged in order bright,
Wait the dire ſhock and kindle for the fight;
The batteries blaze, the moving vollies pour,
The ſhuddering vales and echoing mountains roar;
Clouds of convolving ſmoke the welkin ſpread,
Shroud the wide champaign, and the hills o'erſhade.
Loſt in the rocking thunder's loud career,
No ſhouts or groans invade the hero's ear,
Nor val'rous feats are ſeen, nor flight, nor fall,
While deep-ſurrounding darkneſs buries all.
Till, driv'n by riſing winds, the clouds withdrew,
And oped the ſpreading ſlaughter to his view;

He ſaw the Britiſh leader, borne afar,
In duſt and gore beyond the wings of war;
Saw the long ranks of foes his hoſt ſurround,
His chiefs confuſed, his ſquadrons preſs the ground;
As, hemm'd on every ſide, the trembling train
Nor dare the fight, nor can they flee the plain.
But, while conflicting tumult thinn'd the hoſt,
Their flags, their arms in wild confuſion toſt,
Bold in the midſt a blooming warrior ſtrode,
And tower'd undaunted o'er the field of blood,
In deſperate toils with riſing vengeance burn'd,
And the pale ſquadrons brighten'd where he turn'd.
As, when thick vapors veil the evening ſky,
And ſtarry hoſts, in half-ſeen luſtre fly,
Bright Heſper ſhines o'er all the twinkling croud,
And gives new ſplendor thro' the opening cloud.
Fair on a firey ſteed, ſublime he roſe,
Wedg'd the firm files and eyed the circling foes;
Then waved his gleamy ſword, that flaſh'd the day,
And, thro' dread legions, hew'd the rapid way,
His hoſts roll forward, like an angry flood,
Sweep ranks away and ſmear their paths in blood;
The hovering foes purſue the ſtrife afar,
And ſhower their balls along the flying war;
When the brave leader turns his ſweeping force,
Points the flight forward—ſpeeds his backward courſe;
The foes fly ſcattering where his arm is wheel'd,
And his firm train treads ſafely o'er the field.

While theſe fierce toils the penſive chief deſcried,
With anxious thought he thus addreſs'd the guide;
Theſe numerous throngs, in robes of white array'd,
From Gallia's ſhores the peaceful bounds invade,
And there Britannia's ſtandard waves ſublime,
In crimſon pomp to ſhield the friendly clime.
Why here, in vengeance, roll the furious bands?
And ſtrow their corſes o'er theſe pathleſs lands?
Can Europe's realms, the ſeat of endleſs ſtrife,
Afford no trophies for the waſte of life?
Can monarchs there no proud applauſes gain?
No living laurel for their ſubjects ſlain?
Nor Belgia's plains ſo fertile made with gore,
Hide heroes' bones nor feaſt the vultures more?
Danube and Rhine no more their currents ſtain,
Nor ſweep the ſlaughter'd myriads to the main?
That infant empires here the rage muſt feel,
And theſe pure ſtreams with foreign carnage ſwell.
But who the chief, that cloſed in firm array
The baffled legions and reſtored the day?
There ſhines, in veteran ſkill and youthful charms,
The boaſt of nature and the pride of arms.

The Power replied; In each ſucceſſive age,
Their different views thy varying race engage.
Here roll the years, when Albion's generous hoſt,
Leagued with thy children, guard the invaded coaſt;
That infant ſtates their veteran force may train,
And nobler toils in later fields ſuſtain;

When future foes ſuperior banners wave,
The realms to ravage and the race enſlave.
Here toils brave Albion with the ſons of Gaul;
Here hapleſs Braddock finds his deſtined fall;
Thy greateſt ſon, in that young martial frame,
From yon loſt field begins a life of fame.
Tis he, in future ſtrife and darker days,
Deſponding ſtates to ſovereign rule ſhall raiſe,
When the weak empire, in his arm, ſhall find
The ſword, the ſhield, the bulwark of mankind.

The Seraph ſpoke; when thro' the purpled air,
The northern ſquadrons ſpread the flames of war:
O'er dim Champlain, and thro' ſurrounding groves
Raſh Abercrombie, mid his thouſands, moves
To fierce unequal ſtrife; the batteries roar,
Shield the grim foes and rake the banner'd ſhore;
His fainting troops the dreadful conteſt yield,
And heaps of carnage ſtrow the fatal field.

While glorious Amherſt on a diſtant iſle,
Leads a bold legion, and renews the toil;
High flame the ſhips, the billows ſwell with gore,
And the red ſtandard ſhades the conquer'd ſhore.

And lo, a Britiſh hoſt, unbounded ſpread,
O'er ſealike Laurence, caſts a moving ſhade;
On leſſening tides, they hold their fearleſs flight,
Till rocky walls ſalute their longing ſight.
They tread the ſhore, the arduous conflict claim,
Riſe the tall mountain, like a rolling flame,

Stretch their wide wings in circling onſet far,
And move to fight, as clouds of heaven at war.
The ſmoke falls folding thro' the downward ſky,
And ſhrouds the mountain from the hero's eye;
While on the burning top, in open day,
The flaſhing ſwords, in fiery arches, play.
As on a ridgy ſtorm, in terrors driven,
The forky flames curl round the vault of heaven,
The thunders break, the burſting torrents flow,
And flood the air, and whelm the hills below;
Or, as on plains of light, when Michael ſtrove,
And ſwords of Cherubim to combat move;
Ten thouſand fiery forms together play,
And flaſh new lightning on empyreal day.
Long raged promiſcuous combat, half conceal'd;
When ſudden parle ſuſpended all the field;
Thick groans ſucceed, the cloud forſakes the plain,
And the high hill is topp'd with heaps of ſlain.
Now, proud in air, the conquering ſtandard waved,
And ſhouting hoſts proclaim'd a country ſaved;
While, calm and ſilent, where the ranks retire,
He ſaw brave Wolfe, in pride of youth, expire.
So the pale moon, when morning beams ariſe,
Veils her lone viſage in the ſilent ſkies;
Required no more to drive the ſhades away,
Nor waits to view the glories of the day.
Again the towns aſpire, the cultured field
And blooming vale their copious treaſures yield;

The grateful hind his cheerful labour proves,
And ſongs of triumph fill the warbling groves;
The conſcious flocks, returning joys that ſhare,
Spread thro' the midland, o'er the walks of war:
When, borne on eaſtern winds, dark vapors riſe,
And ſail and lengthen round the weſtern ſkies;
Veil all the viſion from his anxious ſight,
And wrap the climes in univerſal night.

The hero grieved, and thus beſought the Power·
Why ſinks the ſcene? or muſt I view no more?
Muſt here the fame of that fair world deſcend?
And my brave children find ſo ſoon their end?
Where then the word of Heaven, Mine eyes ſhould ſee
That half mankind ſhould owe their bliſs to me?

The Power replied; Ere long, in happier view,
The realms ſhall brighten, and thy joys renew.
The years advance, when round the thronging ſhore,
They riſe confuſed to change the ſource of power;
When Albion's Prince, that ſway'd the happy land,
Shall ſtretch, to lawleſs rule, the ſovereign hand;
To bind in ſlavery's chains the peaceful hoſt,
Their rights unguarded and their charters loſt.
Now raiſe thine eye; from this deluſive claim,
What glorious deeds adorn their growing fame!

Columbus look'd; and ſtill around them ſpread,
From ſouth to north, the immeaſurable ſhade;
At laſt, the central ſhadows burſt away,
And riſing regions open'd on the day.

He ſaw, once more, bright Del'ware's ſilver ſtream.
And Penn's throng'd city caſt a cheerful gleam:
The dome of ſtate, that met his eager eye,
Now heaved its arches in a loftier ſky;
The burſting gates unfold: and lo, within,
A ſolemn train, in conſcious glory, ſhine.
The well-known forms his eye had traced before,
In different realms along the extended ſhore;
Here, graced with nobler fame, and robed in ſtate,
They look'd and moved magnificently great.
High on the foremoſt ſeat, in living light,
Majeſtic Randolph caught the hero's ſight:
Fair on his head, the civic crown was placed,
And the firſt dignity his ſceptre graced.
He opes the cauſe, and points in proſpect far,
Thro' all the toils that wait the impending war—
But, hapleſs ſage, thy reign muſt ſoon be o'er,
To lend thy luſtre and to ſhine no more.
So the bright morning ſtar, from ſhades of even,
Leads up the dawn, and lights the front of heaven,
Points to the waking world the ſun's broad way,
Then veils his own and ſhines above the day.
And ſee great Waſhington behind thee riſe,
Thy following ſun, to gild our morning ſkies;
O'er ſhadowy climes to pour the enlivening flame,
The charms of freedom and the fire of fame.
The aſcending chief adorn'd his ſplendid ſeat,
Like Randolph, enſign'd with a crown of ſtate;

Where the green patriot bay beheld, with pride,
The hero's laurel ſpringing by its ſide;
His ſword hung uſeleſs, on his graceful thigh,
On Britain ſtill he caſt a filial eye;
But ſovereign fortitude his viſage bore,
To meet their legions on the invaded ſhore.
Sage Franklin next aroſe, in awful mein,
And ſmiled, unruffled, o'er the approaching ſcene;
High on his locks of age a wreath was braced,
Palm of all arts, that e'er a mortal graced;
Beneath him lies the ſceptre kings have borne,
And crowns and laurels from their temples torn.
Naſh, Rutledge, Jefferſon, in council great,
And Jay and Laurens oped the rolls of fate;
The Livingſtons, fair Freedom's generous band,
The Lees, the Houſtons, fathers of the land,
O'er climes and kingdoms turn'd their ardent eyes,
Bade all the oppreſs'd to ſpeedy vengeance riſe;
All powers of ſtate, in their extended plan,
Riſe from conſent to ſhield the rights of man.
Bold Wolcott urged the all-important cauſe;
With ſteady hand the ſolemn ſcene he draws;
Undaunted firmneſs with his wiſdom join'd,
Nor kings nor worlds could warp his ſtedfaſt mind.
Now, graceful riſing from his purple throne,
In radiant robes, immortal Hoſmer ſhone;
Myrtles and bays his learned temples bound,
The ſtateſman's wreath the poet's garland crown'd,

Morals and laws expand his liberal ſoul,
Beam from his eyes and in his accents roll.
But lo, an unſeen hand the curtain drew,
And ſnatch'd the patriot from the hero's view;
Wrapp'd in the ſhroud of death, he ſees deſcend
The guide of nations and the Muſes' friend.
Columbus dropp'd a tear; the Angel's eye
Traced the freed ſpirit mounting thro' the ſky.
Adams, enraged, a broken charter bore,
And lawleſs acts of miniſterial power;
Some injured right, in each looſe leaf appears,
A king in terrors and a land in tears;
From all the guileful plots the veil he drew,
With eye retortive look'd creation thro',
Oped the wide range of nature's boundleſs plan,
Traced all the ſteps of liberty and man;
Crouds roſe to vengeance while his accents rung,
And Independence thunder'd from his tongue.
The hero turn'd. And tow'rd the crouded coaſt,
Roſe on the wave a wide-extended hoſt,
They ſhade the main and ſpread their ſails abroad,
From the wide Laurence to the Georgian flood,
Point their black batteries to the approaching ſhore,
And burſting flames begin the hideous roar.
Where guardleſs Falmouth, looking o'er the bay,
Beheld, unmoved, the ſtormy thunders play,
The fire begins; the ſhells o'er-arching fly,
And ſhoot a thouſand rainbows thro' the ſky;

On Charleſtown ſpires, on Briſtol roofs, they light,
Groton and Fairfield kindle from the flight,
Fair Kingſton burns, and York's delightful fanes,
And beauteous Norfolk lights the neighbouring plains,
From realm to realm, the ſmoky volumes bend,
Reach round the bays and up the ſtreams extend;
Deep o'er the concave heavy wreaths are roll'd,
And midland towns and diſtant groves infold.
Thro' the dark curls of ſmoke the winged fires
Climb in tall pyramids, above the ſpires;
Cinders, high-ſailing, kindle heaven around,
And falling ſtructures ſhake the ſmouldering ground.
Now, where the ſheeted flames thro' Charleſtown roar
And laſhing waves hiſs round the burning ſhore,
Thro' the deep folding fires, a neighbouring height
Thunders o'er all and ſeems a field of fight.
Like ſhadowy phantoms in an evening grove,
To the dark ſtriſe the cloſing ſquadrons move;
They join, they break, they thicken thro' the air,
And blazing batteries burſt along the war;
Now, wrapp'd in reddening ſmoke, now dim in ſight,
They ſweep the hill or wing the downward flight;
Here, wheel'd and wedg'd, whole ranks together turn,
And the long lightnings from their pieces burn,
There, ſcattering flaſhes light the ſcanty train,
And broken ſquadrons tread the moving plain.
Britons in freſh battalions riſe the height,
And, with increaſing vollies, give the fight.

Till, ſmear'd with clouds of duſt, and bath'd in gore,
As growing foes their raiſed artillery pour,
Columbia's hoſts move o'er the fields afar,
And ſave, by ſlow retreat, the ſad remains of war.
There ſtrides bold Putnam, and from all the plains,
Calls the tired hoſt, the tardy rear ſuſtains,
And, mid the whizzing deaths that fill the air,
Waves back his ſword and dares the following war.
Thro' falling fires, Columbus ſees remain
Half of each hoſt in heaps promiſcuous ſlain;
While dying crouds the lingering life-blood pour,
And ſlippery ſteeps are trod with prints of gore.
There, hapleſs Warren, thy cold earth was ſeen,
There ſpring thy laurels in immortal green;
Deareſt of chiefs, that ever preſs'd the plain,
In Freedom's cauſe, with early honours, ſlain,
Still dear in death, as when in fight you moved,
By hoſts applauded and by Heaven approved;
The faithful Muſe ſhall tell the world thy fame,
And unborn realms reſound the immortal name.
Now, from all plains, as ſmoky wreaths decay,
Unnumber'd ſhapes ſtart forward to the affray;
Tall, thro' the leſſening ſhadows, half conceal'd,
They glide and gather in a central field; [they ſtand,
There, ſtretch'd immenſe, like lengthening groves
Eye the dark foe and eager ſtrife demand.
High in the frowning front, exalted ſhone
A hero, pointing tow'rd the half-ſeen ſun;

As, thro' the miſt the burſting ſplendors glow,
And light the paſſage to the diſtant foe;
His waving ſteel returns the living day,
Clears the broad plains and marks the warrior's way;
The long, deep ſquadrons range in order bright,
And move impatient for the promiſed fight.

When great Columbus ſaw the chief ariſe,
And his bold blade caſt lightning on the ſkies,
He traced the form that met his view before,
On drear Ohio's deſolated ſhore.
Matured with years, with nobler glory warm,
Fate in his eye, and vengeance on his arm.
The great Obſerver here with joy beheld
The hero moving in a broader field.
Unnumber'd chiefs around their leader ſtand,
Fired by his voice, and guided by his hand,
Now on his ſteps their raptured eye-balls glow,
And now roll dreadful on the approaching foe.

There roſe brave Greene, in all the ſtrength of arms,
Unmoved and brightening as the danger warms;
In counſel great, in every ſcience ſkill'd,
Pride of the camp and terror of the field.
With eager look, conſpicuous o'er the croud,
The daring port of great Montgomery ſtrode;
Bared the bright blade, with honour's call elate,
Claim'd the firſt field, and haſten'd to his fate.
Calm Lincoln next, with unaffected mein,
In dangers daring, active and ſerene,

Careleſs of pomp, with ſteady greatneſs ſhone,
Sparing of others' blood and liberal of his own.
Heath, for the impending ſtrife, his falchion draws;
And fearleſs Wooſter aids the ſacred cauſe.
There ſtood ſtern Putnam, ſeam'd with many a ſcar,
The veteran honours of an earlier war;
Undaunted Stirling, dreadful to his foes,
And Gates and Sullivan to vengeance roſe;
While brave M'Dougall, ſteady and ſedate,
Stretch'd the nerved arm to ope the ſcene of fate.
Howe moved with rapture to the toils of fame,
And Schuyler ſtill adorn'd an honour'd name;
Parſons and Smallwood lead their daring bands,
And bold St. Clair in front of thouſands ſtands.
There gallant Knox his moving engines brings,
Mounted and graved, * the laſt reſort of kings;
The long, black rows in dreadful order wait,
Their grim jaws gaping ſoon to utter fate;
When, at his word, the red-wing'd clouds ſhall riſe,
And the deep thunders rock the ſhores and ſkies.
Beneath a waving ſword, in blooming prime,
Favette moves graceful, ardent and ſublime;
In foreign guiſe, in freedom's noble cauſe,
His untried blade the youthful hero draws;
On the great chief his eyes in tranſport roll,
And fame and Waſhington inſpire his ſoul.

* Ultima ratio regum; a device of Louis XIV. engraved on his ordnance.

Steuben advanced, in veteran armour dreſt,
The noble enſign beaming on his breaſt;
From rank to rank, in eager haſte, he flew,
And marſhall'd hoſts in dread arrangement drew
Morris, in aid, with open coffers ſtood,
And Wadſworth, patron of the brave and good.
While other chiefs and heirs of deathleſs fame
Riſe into ſight, and equal honours claim;
But who can tell the dew-drops of the morn?
Or count the rays that in the diamond burn?
Now, the broad field as gathering ſquadrons ſhade,
The ſun's glad beam their ſhining ranks diſplay'd;
The glorious leader waved his glittering ſteel,
Bade the long train in circling order wheel;
And while the banner'd hoſts around him roll,
Thus into thouſands ſpeaks the warrior's ſoul:
Ye patriot chiefs, and every daring band,
That lift the ſteel or tread the invaded ſtrand,
Behold the taſk! theſe beauteous realms to ſave,
Or yield whole nations to an inſtant grave.
See the dark ſquadrons moving to the ſhore,
Hear, from all ports, their boaſted thunders roar:
O'er bloody plains, from Charleſtown-heights, they ſtray,
O'er far Champlain they lead their northern way,
Virginian banks behold their ſtreamers glide,
And hoſtile navies load each ſouthern tide.
Beneath their ſteps your ſmouldering temples lie,
And wreaths of ſmoke o'ercaſt the reddening ſky.

With eager ſtride they tempt a nobler prize;
Theſe boundleſs empires feaſt their envious eyes;
They ſee your fields to lordly manors turn'd,
Your children butcher'd and your villas burn'd;
While following millions, thro' the reign of time,
That claim their birth in this indulgent clime,
Bend the weak knee, in ſervile chains confined;
And ſloth and ſlavery overwhelm mankind.

Riſe then to war, to noble vengeance riſe,
Ere the grey ſire, the helpleſs infant dies;
Look thro' the world, where endleſs years deſcend,
What realms, what ages on your arms depend!
Reverſe the fate, avenge the inſulted ſky;
Move to the ſtriſe, we conquer or we die.

While thus he ſpoke, the furious files advance,
And fiercer lightnings o'er the champaign dance.
At once, the different ſkirts are wheel'd, afar,
In different realms, to meet the diſtant war.

With his dread hoſt, Montgomery iſſues forth,
And lights his paſſage thro' the duſky north;
O'er ſtreams and lakes his conquering banners play,
Navies and forts, ſurrendering, mark his way;
Thro' deſert wilds, o'er rocks and fens, they go,
And hills before them, loſe their craggs in ſnow;
Unbounded toils they brave; when riſe in ſight
Quebec's dread walls, and Wolfe's ſtill dreary height;
They climb the ſteep, he eyes the turrets round,
With piked hoſts and dark artillery crown'd,

The daring onſet points; and, high in air,
O'er rocky ramparts leads the dreadful war.
As wreaths of morning miſt aſcend on high
Up the tall mountain's ſide, and reach the ſky,
So roſe the rapid hoſt; the walls are red
With flaſhing flames; down roll the heaps of dead;
Now back recoil the ranks, o'er ſquadrons ſlain,
And leave their leader, with a ſcanty train,
Cloſed in the circling terrors of the wall,
Where round his arm the hoſtile legions fall.
Through the wide ſtreets, collecting from afar,
The foes in ſhouting ſquadrons urged the war,
The ſmoke convolved, the thunders rock'd around,
And the brave hero preſt the gorey ground.
Another Wolfe Columbus here beheld,
In youthful charms, a ſoul undaunted yield;
But loſt, o'erpower'd, his hardy hoſt remains,
Stretch'd by his ſide, or led in captive chains.

Now the bright Angel turn'd the hero's eye,
In other realms, where other ſtandards fly;
Where the great leader, mid ſurrounding foes,
Still greater riſes, as the danger grows;
And wearied ranks, o'er weltering warriors ſlain,
Attend his courſe thro' many a crimſon'd plain.
From Hudſon's banks, along the dreary ſtrand,
He guards in firm retreat, his feeble band;
While countleſs foes, with Britiſh Howe advance,
Bend o'er his rear and point the lifted lance;

O'er Del'ware's frozen wave, with ſcanty force,
He lifts the ſword and points the backward courſe,
Wings the dire vengeance on the ſhouting train,
And leads whole ſquadrons in the captive chain;
Where vaunting foes to half their numbers yield,
Tread back the flight, or preſs the fatal field.
While, mid the furious ſtriſe, brave Mercer ſtrode,
And ſeal'd the victory with his ſtreaming blood.

Now, where dread Laurence mingles with the main,
Roſe, on the widening wave, a hoſtile train:
From ſhore to ſhore, along the unfolding ſkies,
Beneath full ſails, the approaching ſquadrons riſe;
High waving on the right, red banners dance,
And Britiſh legions o'er the decks advance;
While at their ſide an azure flag, diſplay'd,
Leads a long hoſt, in German robes array'd
Tall on the boldeſt bark, ſuperior ſhone
A warrior, enſign'd with a various crown;
Myrtles and laurels equal honours join'd,
Which arms had purchaſed and the Muſes twined;
His ſword waved forward, and his ardent eye
Seem'd ſharing empires in the ſouthern ſky.
Beſide him roſe a herald, to proclaim
His various honours, titles, feats and fame;
Who raiſed an opening ſcroll, where proudly ſhone
Pardon to realms and nations yet unknown.

Champlain receives the congregated hoſt,
And his dark waves, beneath the ſails, are loſt;

St. Clair beholds; and, with his ſcanty train,
In firm retreat, o'er many a fatal plain, [force,
Lures their wild march.—Wide moves their furious
Where flaming hamlets mark their waſting courſe;
Thro' pathleſs realms their ſpreading ranks are wheel'd
O'er Mohawk's weſtern wave and Bennington's dread
Till, where deep Hudſon's winding waters ſtray, [field.
A yeoman hoſt oppoſed their rapid way;
There on a towery height brave Gates aroſe,
Waved the blue ſteel and dared the headlong foes;
Undaunted Lincoln, moving at his ſide, [wide;
Urged the dread ſtrife, and ſpread the ſquadrons
Now roll, like winged ſtorms, the lengthening lines,
The clarion thunders and the battle joins;
Thick flames, in vollied flaſhes, fill the air,
And echoing mountains give the noiſe of war;
The clouds riſe reddening, round the dreadful height,
And veil the ſkies and wrap the ſounding fight.
Now, in the ſkirt of night, where thouſands toil,
Ranks roll away and into light recoil;
The rout increaſes, all the Britiſh train
Tread back their ſteps and ſcatter o'er the plain;
To the glad holds precipitate retire,
And wide behind them ſtreams the flaſhing fire.
Scarce moved the ſmoke above the gorey height,
And oped the ſlaughter to the hero's ſight;
Back to their fate, when baffled ſquadrons flew,
Reſumed their rage and pour'd the ſtrife anew,

Again the batteries roar, the lightnings play,
Again they fall, again they roll away.
And now Columbia, circling round the field,
Points her full force, the trembling thouſands yield;
When bold Burgoyne, in one diſaſtrous day,
Sees future crowns and former wreaths decay;
While two illuſtrious armies ſhade the plain,
The mighty victors and the captive train.

THE VISION OF COLUMBUS.

BOOK VI.

THUS view'd the ſage. When, lo, in eaſtern ſkies,
From glooms unfolding, Gallia's coaſts ariſe.
Bright o'er the ſcenes of ſtate, a golden throne,
Inſtarr'd with gems and hung with purple, ſhone.
Great Louis there, the pride of monarchs, ſate,
And fleets and moving armies round him wait;
O'er weſtern ſhores extend his ardent eyes,
Thro' glorious toils where ſtruggling nations riſe;
Each virtuous deed, each new illuſtrious name,
Wakes in his ſoul the living light of fame.
He ſees the liberal, univerſal cauſe,
That wondering worlds in ſtill attention draws;
And marks, beyond, through weſtern walks of day,
Where midnight ſuns their happier beams diſplay,
What ſires of unborn nations claim their birth,
And aſk their empires in that waſte of earth.

Then o'er the eaſtern world he turn'd his eye;
Where, ſunk in ſlavery hapleſs kingdoms lie;
Saw realms exhauſted to enrich a throne,
Their fruits untaſted and their rights unknown:

A tear of pity ſpoke his melting mind—
He raiſed his ſceptre to relieve mankind,
Eyed the great father of the Bourbon name,
Awaked his virtues and recall'd his fame.
Fired by the grandeur of the ſplendid throne,
Illuſtrious chiefs and councils round him ſhone;
On the glad youth with kindling joy they gaze,
The riſing heir of univerſal praiſe.
Vergennes roſe ſtately o'er the noble throng,
And fates of nations on his accents hung;
Columbia's wrongs his indignation fired,
And generous thoughts his glowing breaſt inſpired;
To aid her infant toils his counſel moved,
In freedom founded and by Heaven approved.
While other peers, in ſacred virtue bold,
With eager voice the coming ſcenes unfold;
Surrounding heroes wait the monarch's word,
In foreign fields to draw the glittering ſword,
Prepared with joy to trace the diſtant main,
Mix in the ſtrife and join the martial train;
Who now aſſert the rights of ſovereign power,
And build new empires on the weſtern ſhore.
O'er all, the approving monarch caſt a look,
And liſtening nations trembled while he ſpoke.
Ye ſtates of France, and, ye of riſing name,
That work thoſe diſtant miracles of fame,
Hear and attend; let Heaven the witneſs bear,
We lift the ſword, we aid the righteous war.

Let leagues eternal bind each friendly land,
Given by our voice, and 'ſtabliſh'd by our hand;
Let yon extenſive empire fix her ſway,
And ſpread her bleſſings with the bounds of day.
Yet know, ye nations, hear, ye Powers above,
Our purpoſed aid no views of conqueſt move;
In that vaſt world, revives no ancient claim
Of regions peopled by the Gallic name;
Our envied bounds, already ſtretch'd afar,
Nor aſk the ſword, nor fear the rage of war;
But Virtue, ſtruggling with the vengeful Power,
That ſtains yon fields and deſolates that ſhore,
With nature's foes bids former compact ceaſe;
We war reluctant, and our wiſh is peace;
To ſuffering nations be the ſuccour given,
The cauſe of nations is the cauſe of Heaven.
He ſpoke; the moving armies ſhade the plain,
And bold D'Eſtaing rode bounding on the main;
O'er lands and ſeas, the loud applauſes rung,
And War and Union dwelt on every tongue.
And now Columbus, tow'rd his favourite ſky,
Saw ſails and ſtores and chiefs and armies fly;
Thro' clouds of ſmoke, and ſtain'd with ſtreaming blood,
Contending navies ſpread their wings abroad.
Europe, from all her ſhores, approves the fight,
And balanced empires wait the finiſh'd fight.
Now circling far, above the labouring main,
Roſe into view the extended coaſts of Spain;

He ſaw bold barks their warlike engines wield,
New ſquadrons courſing round the banner'd field;
Where Gallic ſtreamers o'er the main advance,
The Hiſpanian flags in wonted union dance;
Round the deep gulph, that fair Floridia laves,
In martial pride, their conquering ſtandard waves;
While, thro' the entrance of the midland ſea,
Encountering ſails and hoſtile banners play.
And now the level ſtrand, extending wide,
That opes the buſy Texel's loaded tide,
Roſe brightening from the gloom; beneath his eye,
Famed Belgia's temples glitter to the ſky.
Sudden, the aſſembled States new glory warms,
Their ſhips collect, their thouſands, ruſh to arms,
And, rouſed by conquering Rodney to prepare,
In foreign ſeas, to meet the ſweeping war;
Lift holder wings, in ſign of rage, unfurl'd,
And vengeance bears them round the watery world.
Where waves and mountains ſkirt the northern ſky,
New ſcenes aſcending met the hero's eye.
Increaſing ſplendors up the vault aſpire,
Like boreal lights, the midnight heavens that fire;
And raiſe to view the Baltic's gleaming wave,
Whoſe opening ſtreams ſurrounding cities lave.
Fair on her throne, revolving diſtant fate,
Imperial Katharine majeſtic ſate;
Courts throng around her, kings and heroes ſtand,
Receiving ſwords and ſceptres from her hand.

She waits the day, and bids the nations reſt,
Till that new empire, riſing in the weſt,
Shall ſheathe the ſword, the liberal main aſcend,
And, join'd with her, the ſcale of power ſuſpend;
Bid arts ariſe, and vengeful factions ceaſe,
And commerce lead to univerſal peace.
Chriſtiern, amid his waves, exalted high,
On the great empreſs caſt a reverent eye;
While Sweden's prince obeys her ſovereign word,
And aged Frederic half aſſumes his ſword.
Where wide Germania's opening towers ariſe,
Immortal Joſeph lifts his ardent eyes.
High in a golden car, he ſtands ſublime,
Late borne diſguiſed to every diſtant clime,
The powers, the policies of every throne
He mark'd, unnoticed, and by all unknown;
Now, mid his ſplendid court, his travels o'er,
With eyes directed tow'rd the weſtern ſhore,
The monarch learns, from that illuſtrious train,
To ſhare with liberal hand the bounties of his reign.
Where fair Hibernia's flowery circuit lies,
Her glad ſails wave and gathering armies riſe.
Leinſter and Grattan there aſſert her claim,
And raiſe the realm to freedom and to fame.
Thus all the eaſtern world, in glad amaze,
Gaze on the ſcene and brighten as they gaze;
Wake to new life, aſſume a borrow'd name,
Enlarge the luſtre and partake the fame.

So mounts of ice, that polar ſkies invade,
Unheeded ſtand beneath the evening ſhade;
Yet, when the morning lights their glaring throne,
Give back the day and imitate the ſun.

The growing conteſt now, with loud alarms,
Fill'd every clime and rouſed the world to arms.
Where Indian borders ſkirt the orient ſkies,
To furious ſtrife unwonted myriads riſe;
Great Hyder, there, unconquerably bold,
Bids vengeance move and freedom's flag unfold;
Fires the wide realms t' aſſert their ancient ſway;
And ſcourge fierce Britons from their lawleſs prey.
Round the rich iſles that grace the Atlantic tide,
In dread array the encountering navies ride;
Where Albion's treaſures yield a wealthier prize,
And o'er her walls the Gallic ſtandards riſe.

Still to freſh toils, o'er all the weſtern ſhore,
Her thronging fleets their new battalions pour;
The realms unconquer'd ſtill their terrors wield,
And ſtain with mingled gore the embattled field.
O'er Schuylkill's wave, to various fight they move,
And adverſe nations equal ſlaughter prove;
Till, where dread Monmouth lifts a bloomy height,
Britannia's thouſands met the Obſerver's ſight.
There ſtrode imperious Clinton o'er the field,
And marſhall'd hoſts for ready combat held.
As the dim ſun, beneath the ſkirts of even,
Crimſons the clouds that ſail the weſtern heaven;

So, in red wavy rows, where ſpread the train
Of men and ſtandards, ſhone the unmeaſured plain,
But now the chief of heroes moved in ſight,
And the long ranks roll forward to the fight;
He points the charge, the mounted thunders roar,
And plough the plain, and rock the diſtant ſhore.
Above the folds of ſmoke, that veil'd the war,
His guiding ſword illumed the fields of air;
The vollied flames, that burſt along the plain,
Break the deep clouds and ſhow the piles of ſlain;
Till flight begins; the ſmoke is roll'd away,
And the red ſtandards open into day.
Britons and Germans hurry from the field,
Now wrapp'd in duſt, and now to ſight reveal'd;
Behind, great Waſhington his falchion drives,
Thins the pale ranks, and copious vengeance gives.
Hoſts captive bow, and move behind his arm,
And hoſts before him wing the driven ſtorm;
When the glad ſhore ſalutes their fainting ſight,
And thundering navies ſcreen their rapid flight.
Thro' plains of death, that gleam with hoſtile fires,
Brave Lincoln now to ſouthern climes retires;
Where o'er her ſtreams beleagured Charleſton roſe,
The hero moves to meet the aſſembled foes.
Shading the invaded iſle, on either flood,
Red ſtandards waved and winged batteries rode;
While, braving death his ſcanty hoſt remains,
And the dread ſtrife with various fate ſuſtains.

High from the ſable decks, the burſting fires
Sweep the full ſtreets, and cleave the glittering ſpires.
Vaulted with flying flames, the burning air
Reddens with ſhells and pours the etherial war;
The tented plain, where dauntleſs heroes tread,
Is torn with broken craggs and ſtrow'd with dead.
Long crouds of ſuppliants, round the gallant chief,
Raiſe their wild cries and pour their frantic grief;
Each ſhower of flames renews their ſtartled woe,
They wail the ſtrife, they dread the infuriate foe
The afflicted Fair, while tears bedew their charms,
Babes at their ſide and infants in their arms,
With piercing ſhrieks his guardian hand implore,
To ſave them trembling from the victor's power.
He ſhares their anguiſh with a moiſtening eye,
And bids the balls rain thicker thro' the ſky;
When a loſt hero, in a neighbouring poſt,
Gives a lone fortreſs to the approaching hoſt.
Now gathering thouſands croud around the iſle,
Threat wider vengeance and increaſe the toil;
On temper'd terms, great Lincoln yields the prize,
And plucks the ſtandard from the ſaddening ſkies.
The conquering legions now the champaign tread,
And tow'rd the north their fire and ſlaughter ſpread;
Thro' towns and realms, where arming peaſants fly,
The bold Cornwallis bears his ſtandard high;
O'er many a field diſplays his dreadful force,
And thouſands fall and thouſands aid his courſe;

While thro' the conquer'd lands, from every plain,
The freſh battalions join his ſplendid train.
So mountain ſtreams, o'er climes of melting ſnow,
Spread with encreaſing waves, and whelm the world below.
The great Columbus, with an anxious ſigh,
Saw Britiſh enſigns reaching round the ſky,
Saw deſolation whelm his favourite coaſt,
His children ſcatter'd and their vigor loſt;
De Kalb in furious combat preſs the plain,
Morgan and Smallwood various ſhocks ſuſtain;
When Greene, in lonely greatneſs, roſe to view,
A few firm patriots to his ſtandard drew;
And, moving ſtately to a riſing ground,
Bade the loud trump to ſpeedy vengeance ſound;
Fired by the voice, new ſquadrons, from afar,
Croud to the hero and demand the war.
Round all the ſhores and plains he turn'd his eye;
Saw forts ariſe and conquering banners fly:
The ſaddening ſcene ſuſpends his riſing ſoul,
And fates of empires in his boſom roll.
With ſcanty force where ſhould he lift the ſteel?
While hoſting foes immeaſurably wheel;
Or how behold the boundleſs ſlaughter ſpread?
Himſelf ſtand idle and his country bleed?
A ſilent moment, thus the hero ſtood,
And held his warriors from the field of blood;
Then points the Britiſh legions where to roll,
Marks out their progreſs and deſigns the whole.

He lures their chief, o'er yielding realms to roam,
To build his greatneſs and to find his doom;
With gain and grandeur feeds his fateleſs flame,
And leaves the victory to a nobler name;
Gives to great Waſhington, to meet his way,
Nor claims the glories of ſo bright a day.

Now to the conquer'd ſouth with gathering force,
O'er ſanguine plains he ſhapes his rapid courſe;
Forts fall around him; hoſts before him fly,
And captive bands his growing train ſupply.
At length, far ſpreading thro' a fatal field,
Collecting chiefs their circling armies wheel'd;
Near Eutaw's ſount, where, long renown'd for blood,
Pillars of ancient fame in triumph ſtood,
Britannia's ſquadrons, ranged in order bright,
Stand, like a fiery wall, and wait the ſhock of fight.

When o'er the diſtant hill brave Greene aroſe,
Eyed the far plain and view'd the glittering foes;
Diſpoſed his ſquadrons, form'd each folded train,
To lead the charge, or the wide wings ſuſtain,
Rouſed all their rage ſuperior force to prove,
Waved the bright blade, and bade the onſet move.
As hovering clouds, when morning beams ariſe,
Hang their red curtains round the eaſtern ſkies,
Unfold a ſpace to hail the promiſed ſun,
And catch their ſplendors from his riſing throne;
Thus glow'd the approaching fronts, whoſe ſteely glare
Glanced o'er the hideous interval of war.

Now roll with kindling haſte the rapid lines,
From wing to wing the ſounding battle joins;
Batteries, and foſſes wide, and ranks of fire,
In mingled ſhocks, their thundering blaſts expire
Beneath the ſmoke, when firm advancing bands,
With piked arms bent forward in their hands,
In dreadful ſilence tread. As, wrapp'd from ſight,
The nightly ambuſh moves to ſecret fight;
So ruſh the raging files, and ſightleſs cloſe,
In plunging ſtrife, with fierce conflicting foes;
They reach, they ſtrike, they ſtruggle o'er the ſlain,
Deal heavier blows, and ſtrow with death the plain;
Ranks cruſh on ranks, with equal ſlaughter gored,
While dripping ſtreams, from every lifted ſword,
Stain the thin carnaged hoſts; who ſtill maintain,
With mutual ſhocks, the vengeance of the plain.
Till, where brave Williams ſtrove and Campbell fell,
Unwonted ſtrokes the Britiſh force repel:
The rout begins; the ſhatter'd wings, afar,
Roll back in haſte and ſcatter from the war;
They drop their arms, they ſcour the marſhy field;
Whole ſquadrons fall and faint battalions yield.
O'er all the great Obſerver fix'd his eye,
Mark'd the whole ſtrife, beheld them fall and fly;
He ſaw where Greene thro' all the combat drove,
And death and victory with his preſence move;
Beneath his arm, ſaw Marion pour the ſtrife,
Pickens and Sumner, prodigal of life;

He ſaw young Waſhington, the child of fame,
Preſerve in fight the honours of his name;
Brave Lee, in pride of youth, and veteran might
Swept the dread field, and put whole troops to flight;
While numerous chiefs, that equal trophies raiſe
Wrought, not unſeen, the deeds of deathleſs praiſe.
Columbus now his gallant ſons beheld
In triumph move thro' many a banner'd field;
When o'er the main, from Gallia's crouded ſhore,
To the glad ſtrife a hoſt of heroes pour.
On the tall ſhaded decks the leaders ſtand,
View leſſening waves and hail the approaching ſtrand.
Brave Rochambeau, in gleamy ſteel array'd,
The aſcending ſcenes with eager joy ſurvey'd;
Saw Waſhington, amid his thouſands, ſtride,
And long'd to toil and conquer by his ſide.
Great Chaſtelleux, with philoſophic view,
Mark'd the glad prize that riſing realms purſue;
Intent in thought, his glowing boſom warms,
To grace the walks of ſcience and of arms.
Two brother chiefs, in rival luſtre, roſe,
Rear'd the long lance, and claim'd the field of foes;
The bold Viominils, of equal fame,
And eager both t' exalt the noble name.
Lauzon, beneath his ſail, in armour bright
Frown'd o'er the wave, impatient for the fight;
A fiery ſteed beſide the hero ſtood,
And his broad blade waved forward o'er the croud.

And now, with eager haſte, they tread the coaſt;
Thro' grateful regions lead the veteran hoſt;
Hail the great chief, beneath his banners join,
Demand the foe and bid the ſtrife begin.
Again Columbus caſt his anxious eye,
Where the red ſtandard waved along the ſky;
And, graced with ſpoils of many a field of blood,
The bold Cornwallis on a bulwark ſtood.
O'er conquer'd provinces and towns in flame,
He mark'd his recent monuments of fame,
High raiſed in air, his hands ſecurely hold,
With conſcious pride, a ſheet of cypher'd gold;
There, in deluſive haſte, his ſkill had graved
A clime ſubdued, a flag in triumph waved:
A middle realm, by fairer figures known,
Adorn'd with fruits, lay bounded for his own;
Deep thro' the centre, ſpreads a beauteous bay,
Full ſails aſcend and golden rivers ſtray;
Bright palaces ariſe, relieved in gold,
And gates and ſtreets the croſſing lines unfold.
O'er all the mimic ſcene, his fingers trace
His future ſeat and glory of his race.
While thus the raptured chief his conqueſts view'd,
And gazing thouſands round the rampart ſtood,
Whom future eaſe and golden dreams employ,
The ſongs of triumph and the feaſt of joy;
Sudden, great Waſhington aroſe in view,
And union'd flags his ſtately ſteps purſue;

Bleſt Gallia's bands and young Columbia's pride,
Bend the long march and glitter at his ſide.
Now on the wave the warring fleets advance,
And different enſigns o'er their pinions dance;
From northern ſhores, great Albion's flag, unfurl'd,
Waved proud defiance to the watery world;
While, from the ſouthern iſles, a daring train,
With Gallic banners; ſhades the billowy main.
Here brave De Graſſe in awful ſplendor, rode,
And there ſtern Graves a rival ſplendor ſhow'd.
The approaching ſails, as far as eye can ſweep,
Look thro' the ſkies and ſhade the ſhuddering deep.
As, when the winds of heaven, from each far pole,
Their adverſe ſtorms acroſs the concave roll,
The fleecy vapors thro' the expanſion run,
Veil the blue vault and tremble o'er the ſun;
Till the dark folding wings together drive,
And, ridg'd with fires, and rock'd with thunders, ſtrive;
So, bearing thro' the void, at firſt appear.
White clouds of canvaſs, floating on the air;
Then frown the approaching fronts; the ſails are laid,
And the black decks extend a dreadful ſhade;
While rolling flames and tides of ſmoke ariſe,
And thundering cannons rock the ſeas and ſkies.
Where the long burſting fires the cloud diſcloſe,
Hoſts heave in fight and blood the decks o'er-flows;
There, from the ſtrife, toſt navies riſe to view,
Drive back to vengeance and the toil renew;

Here, ſhatter'd barks in ſquadrons move afar,
Led thro' the ſmoke, and ſtruggling from the war;
While hulls half-ſeen, beneath a gaping wave,
And plunging heroes fill the watery grave.
Now the dark ſmoky volumes roll'd away,
And a long line aſcended into day;
The pinions ſwell'd, Britannia's flag aroſe,
And flew the vengeance of triumphing foes.
When up the bay, Virginian lands that laves,
Great Gallia's line its conquering ſtandard waves:
Where ſtill dread Waſhington allumes the way,
And fleets and moving realms his voice obey;
While the brave Briton, mid the gathering hoſt,
Perceives his glories and his empire loſt.
The heaven-taught ſage in this broad ſcene beheld
His favourite ſons the fates of nations wield;
There joyous Lincoln ſhone in arms again,
Nelſon and Knox moved ardent o'er the plain,
Unconquer'd Scammel, mid the cloſing ſtrife,
In ſight of victory, pour'd his gallant life;
While Gallic thouſands eager toils ſuſtain,
And death and danger brighten every train.
Where Tarleton ſtrides, with hopes of flight elate,
Brave Lauzon moves, and drives him back to fate.
In one dread view, two choſen bands advance,
Columbia's veterans and the pride of France;
Theſe bold Viominil exalts to fame,
And thoſe Fayette's conducting guidance claim.

They lift the ſword, with rival glory warm,
O'er piked ramparts pour the flaming ſtorm,
The mounted thunders brave, and lead the foe,
In captive ſquadrons, to the plain below.
O'er all great Waſhington his arm extends,
Points every movement, every toil defends,
Bids cloſer ſtrife and bloodier ſtrokes proceed,
New batteries blaze and heavier ſquadrons bleed;
Round the grim foe approaching banners riſe,
And ſhells like meteors vault the flaming ſkies.
With dire diſmay the Britiſh chief beheld
The foe advance, his veterans quit the field;
Deſpair and ſlaughter when he turns his eye.
No hope in combat and no power to fly;
There dread De Graſſe o'erſhades the loaded tide,
Here conquering thouſands all the champaign hide;
Foſſes and batteries, growing on the ſight,
Still pour new thunders and increaſe the fight,
Shells rain before him, rock the ſhores around
And craggs and balls o'erturn the tented ground;
From poſt to poſt, the driven ranks retire,
The earth in crimſon and the ſkies on fire.
Now grateful truce ſuſpends the burning war,
And groans and ſhouts, promiſcuous, load the air;
When the pent ſquadrons, where the ſmokes decay,
Drop all their arms and move in open day.
Columbus ſaw the immeaſurable train,
Thouſands on thouſands, redden all the plain;

Beheld the glorious Leader ſtand ſedate,
Hoſts in his chain, and banners at his feet;
Nor ſmile o'er all, nor chide the fallen chief,
But ſhare with pitying eye his manly grief.
Thus thro' the extremes of life, in every ſtate,
Shines the clear ſoul, beyond all fortune great;
While ſmaller minds, the dupes of fickle chance,
Slight woes o'erwhelm and ſudden joys entrance.
So the full ſun thro' all the changing ſky,
Nor blaſts, nor overpowers the naked eye;
Tho' tranſient ſplendors, borrow'd from his light,
Glance on the mirror and deſtroy the ſight.
He points brave Lincoln, as they move along,
To claim the triumph of the trembling throng;
Who ſees, once more, two armies ſhade the plain,
The mighty victors and the captive train.

THE VISION OF COLUMBUS

BOOK VII.

HAIL ſacred Peace, who claim'ſt thy bright abode,
Mid circling ſaints that grace the throne of God.
Before his arm, around the ſhapeleſs earth,
Stretch'd the wide heavens and gave to nature birth;
Ere morning ſtars his glowing chambers hung,
Or ſongs of gladneſs woke an angel's tongue,
Veil'd in the brightneſs of the Almighty's mind,
In bleſt repoſe thy placid form reclined;
Borne through the heavens with his creating voice,
Thy preſence bade the unfolding worlds rejoice,
Gave to ſeraphic harps their ſounding lays,
Their joys to angels, and to men their praiſe. [ſtain,
From ſcenes of blood, theſe beauteous ſhores that
From gaſping friends that preſs the ſanguine plain,
From fields, long taught in vain thy flight to mourn,
I riſe, delightful Power, and greet thy glad return.
Too long the groans of death, and battle's bray
Have rung diſcordant through the unpleaſing lay:
Let pity's tear its balmy fragrance ſhed,
O'er heroes' wounds and patriot warriors dead;

Accept, departed Shades, theſe grateful ſighs,
Your fond attendants to the approving ſkies.
And thou, my earlieſt friend, my Brother dear,
Thy fall untimely wakes the tender tear.
In youthful ſports, in toils, in blood allied,
My kind companion and my hopeful guide,
When Heaven's ſad ſummons, from our infant eyes
Had call'd our laſt, loved parent to the ſkies.
Tho' young in arms, and ſtill obſcure thy name,
Thy boſom panted for the deeds of fame,
Beneath Montgomery's eye, when, by thy ſteel,
In northern wilds, the lurking ſavage fell.
'Yet, hapleſs youth! when thy great leader bled,
Thro' the ſame wound thy parting ſpirit fled.
But now the untuneful trump ſhall grate no more,
Ye ſilver ſtreams, no longer ſwell with gore;
Bear from your beauteous banks the crimſon ſtain,
With yon retiring navies to the main.
While other views, unfolding on my eyes,
And happier themes bid bolder numbers riſe.
Bring, bounteous Peace, in thy celeſtial throng
Life to my ſoul, and rapture to my ſong;
Give me to trace, with pure unclouded ray,
The arts and virtues that attend thy ſway;
To ſee thy bliſsful charms, that here deſcend,
Through diſtant realms and endleſs years extend.
To caſt new glories o'er the changing clime,
The Seraph now reverſed the flight of time;

Roll'd back the years, that led their courſe before,
And ſtretch'd immenſe the wild uncultured ſhore;
The paths of peaceful ſcience raiſed to view, [purſue.
And ſhow'd the aſcending crouds that uſeful arts
As o'er the canvaſs, when the maſter's mind,
Glows with a future landſcape, well deſign'd,
While gardens, vales and ſtreets and ſtructures riſe,
A new creation to his kindling eyes;
He ſmiles o'er all; and, in delightful ſtrife,
The pencil moves, and calls the whole to life.
So, while the great Columbus ſtood ſublime,
And ſaw wild nature clothe the trackleſs clime;
The green banks heave, the winding currents pour,
The bays and harbours cleave the yielding ſhore,
The champaigns ſpread, the ſolemn groves ariſe,
And the rough mountains lengthen round the ſkies,
Through all the ſcene, he traced with ſkillful ken
The unform'd ſeats and future walks of men; [play,
Mark'd where the fields ſhould bloom, and ſtreamers
And towns and empires claim their peaceful ſway;
When, ſudden waken'd by the Angel's hand,
They roſe in pomp around the cultured land.
In weſtern wilds, where ſtill the natives tread,
From ſea to ſea an inland commerce ſpread;
O'er the dim ſtreams and thro' the gloomy grove,
The trading bands their cumberous burdens move;
Where furrs and ſkins, and all the exhauſtleſs ſtore
Of midland realms deſcended to the ſhore.

Where ſummer's ſuns, along the northern coaſt,
With feeble force diſſolve the chains of froſt,
Prolific waves the ſcaly nations trace,
And tempt the toils of man's laborious race.
Though rich Peruvian ſtrands, beneath the tide,
Their rocks of pearl and ſparkling pebbles hide;
Lured by the gaudy prize, the adventurous train
Plunge the dark deep and brave the ſurging main;
Whole realms of ſlaves the dangerous labours dare,
To ſtud a ſceptre or emblaze a ſtar:
Yet wealthier ſtores theſe genial tides diſplay,
And buſy throngs with nobler ſpoils repay.
The hero ſaw the hardy hoſts advance,
Caſt the long line and aim the barbed lance;
Load the deep floating barks, and bear abroad
To each far clime the life-ſuſtaining food;
While growing ſwarms by nature's hand ſupplied,
People the ſhoals and fill the exhauſtleſs tide.
Where ſouthern ſtreams thro' broad ſavannahs bend,
The rice-clad vales their verdant rounds extend;
Tobago's plant its leaf expanding yields,
The maize luxuriant clothes a thouſand fields;
Steeds, herds and flocks o'er northern regions rove,
Embrown the hill and wanton thro' the grove;
The wood-lands wide their ſturdy honours bend,
The pines, the live-oaks to the ſhores deſcend;
Along the ſtrand unnumber'd keels ariſe,
The huge hulls heave, and maſts aſcend the ſkies;

Launch'd in the deep, o'er eaſtern waves they fly,
Feed every iſle and diſtant lands ſupply.
Silent he gazed; when thus the guardian Power—
Theſe works of peace awhile adorn the ſhore;
But other joys and deeds of laſting praiſe
Shall crown their labours and thy rapture raiſe.
Each orient realm, the former pride of earth,
Where men and ſcience drew their ancient birth,
Shall ſoon behold, on this enlighten'd coaſt,
Their fame tranſcended and their glory loſt.
That train of arts, that graced mankind before,
Warm'd the glad ſage or taught the Muſe to ſoar,
Here with ſuperior ſway their progreſs trace,
And aid the triumphs of thy filial race;
While riſing crouds, with genius unconfined,
Through deep inventions lead the aſtoniſh'd mind,
Wide o'er the world their name unrivall'd raiſe,
And bind their temples with immortal bays.
In youthful minds to wake the ardent flame,
To nurſe the arts, and point the paths of fame,
Behold their liberal fires, with guardian care,
Thro' all the realms their ſeats of ſcience rear.
Great without pomp the modeſt manſions riſe;
Harvard and Yale and Princeton greet the ſkies;
Penn's ample walls o'er Del'ware's margin bend,
On James's bank the royal ſpires aſcend,
Thy turrets, York, Columbia's walks command,
Boſom'd in groves, ſee growing Dartmouth ſtand;

While, o'er the realm reflecting ſolar fires,
On yon tall hill Rhode-Iſland's ſeat aſpires.
O'er all the ſhore, with ſails and cities gay,
And where rude hamlets ſtretch their inland ſway,
With humbler walls unnumber'd ſchools ariſe,
And youths unnumber'd ſieze the ſolid prize,
In no bleſt land has Science rear'd her fane,
And fix'd ſo firm her wide-extended reign;
Each ruſtic here, that turns the furrow'd ſoil,
The maid, the youth, that ply mechanic toil,
In freedom nurſt, in uſeful arts inured,
Know their juſt claims, and ſee their rights ſecured.
And lo, deſcending from the ſeats of art,
The growing throngs for active ſcenes depart;
In various garbs they tread the welcome land,
Swords at their ſide or ſceptres in their hand,
With healing powers bid dire diſeaſes ceaſe,
Or ſound the tidings of eternal peace.
In no bleſt land has fair Religion ſhone,
And fix'd ſo firm her everlaſting throne.
Where, o'er the realms thoſe ſpacious temples ſhine,
Frequent and full the throng'd aſſemblies join;
There, fired with virtue's animating flame,
The ſacred taſk unnumber'd ſages claim;
The taſk, for angels great; in early youth,
To lead whole nations in the walks of truth,
Shed the bright beams of knowledge on the mind,
For ſocial compact harmonize mankind,

To life, to happineſs, to joys above,
The ſoften'd ſoul with ardent zeal to move;
For this the voice of Heaven, in early years,
Tuned the glad ſongs of life-inſpiring ſeers,
For this conſenting ſeraphs leave the ſkies,
The God compaſſionates, the Saviour dies.
Tho' different faiths their various orders ſhow,
That ſeem diſcordant to the train below;
Yet one bleſt cauſe, one univerſal flame,
Wakes all their joys and centres every aim;
They tread the ſame bright ſteps, and ſmoothe the road,
Lights of the world and meſſengers of God.
So the galaxy broad o'er heaven diſplays
Of various ſtars the ſame unbounded blaze;
Where great and ſmall their mingling rays unite,
And earth and ſkies repay the friendly light.
While thus the hero view'd the ſacred band,
Moved by one voice and guided by one hand,
He ſaw the heavens unfold, a form deſcend,
Down the dim ſkies his arm of light extend,
From God's own altar lift a living coal,
Touch their glad lips and brighten every ſoul;
Then, with accordant voice and heavenly tongue,
O'er the wide clime theſe welcome accents rung.
Ye darkling race of poor diſtreſt mankind,
For bliſs ſtill groping and to virtue blind,
Hear from on high th' Almighty's voice deſcend;
Ye heavens, be ſilent, and thou earth, attend.

I reign the Lord of life; I fill the round,
Where ſtars and ſkies and angels know their bound;
Before all years, beyond all thought I live,
Light, form and motion, time and ſpace I give;
Touch'd by this hand, all worlds within me roll,
Mine eye their ſplendor and my breath their ſoul.
Earth, with her lands and ſeas, my power proclaims,
There moves my ſpirit, there deſcend my flames;
Graced with the ſemblance of the Maker's mind,
Roſe from the darkſome duſt the reaſoning kind,
With powers of thought to trace the eternal Cauſe,
That all his works to one great ſyſtem draws,
View the full chain of love, the all-ruling plan,
That binds the God, the angel and the man,
That gives all hearts to feel, all minds to know
The bliſs of harmony, of ſtrife the woe.
This heaven of concord, who of mortal ſtrain
Shall dare oppoſe—he lifts his arm in vain;
The avenging univerſe ſhall on him roll
The intended wrong, and whelm his guilty ſoul.
Then lend your audience; hear, ye ſons of earth,
Riſe into life, behold the promiſed birth;
From pain to joy, from guilt to glory riſe,
Be babes on earth, be ſeraphs in the ſkies.
Lo, to the cries of grief mild mercy bends,
Stern vengeance ſoftens and the God deſcends,
The atoning God, the pardoning grace to ſeal,
The dead to quicken and the ſick to heal.

See from his ſacred ſide the life-blood flow,
Hear in his groans unutterable woe ;
While, fixt in one ſtrong pang, the all-ſuffering Mind
Bears and bewails the tortures of mankind.
But lo, the aſcending pomp ! around him move
His riſing ſaints, the firſt-born ſons of love ;
View the glad throng, the glorious triumph join,
His paths purſue and in his ſplendor ſhine ;
Purged from your ſtains in his atoning blood,
Aſſume his ſpotleſs robes and reign beſide your God.
Thus heard the hero—while his roving view
Traced other crouds that liberal arts purſue ;
When thus the Seraph—Lo, a favourite band,
The torch of ſcience flaming in their hand !
Thro' nature's range their ardent ſouls aſpire,
Or wake to life the canvaſs and the lyre.
Fixt in ſublimeſt thought, behold them riſe,
Superior worlds unfolding to their eyes ;
Heaven in their view unveils the eternal plan,
And gives new guidance to the paths of man.
See on yon darkening height bold Franklin tread,
Heaven's awful thunders rolling o'er his head ;
Convolving clouds the billowy ſkies deform,
And forky flames emblaze the blackening ſtorm.
See the deſcending ſtreams around him burn,
Glance on his rod and with his guidance turn ;
He bids conflicting heavens their blaſts expire,
Curbs the fierce blaze and holds the impriſon'd fire.

No more, when folding ſtorms the vault o'er-ſpread,
The livid glare ſhall ſtrike thy race with dread;
Nor towers nor temples, ſhuddering with the ſound,
Sink in the flames and ſpread deſtruction round.
His daring toils, the threatening blaſt that wait,
Shall teach mankind to ward the bolts of fate;
The pointed ſteel o'er-top the aſcending ſpire,
And lead o'er trembling walls the harmleſs fire;
In his glad fame while diſtant worlds rejoice,
Far as the lightnings ſhine or thunders raiſe their voice.

See the ſage Rittenhouſe, with ardent eye,
Lift the long tube and pierce the ſtarry ſky;
Clear in his view the circling ſyſtems roll,
And broader ſplendors gild the central pole.
He marks what laws the eccentric wanderers bind,
Copies creation in his forming mind,
And bids, beneath his hand, in ſemblance riſe,
With mimic orbs, the labours of the ſkies.
There wondering crouds with raptured eye behold
The ſpangled heavens their myſtic maze unfold;
While each glad ſage his ſplendid hall ſhall grace,
With all the ſpheres that cleave the etherial ſpace.

To guide the ſailor in his wandering way,
See Godfrey's toils reverſe the beams of day.
His lifted quadrant to the eye diſplays
From adverſe ſkies the counteracting rays;
And marks, as devious ſails bewilder'd roll,
Each nice gradation from the ſtedfaſt pole.

See, Weſt with glowing life the canvaſs warms;
His ſovereign hand creates impaſſion'd forms,
Spurns the cold critic rules, to ſieze the heart,
And boldly burſts the former bounds of Art.
No more her powers to ancient ſcenes confined,
He opes her liberal aid to all mankind;
She calls to life each patriot, chief or ſage,
Garb'd in the dreſs and drapery of his age;
Again bold Regulus to death returns,
Again her falling Wolfe Britannia mourns;
Warriors in arms to frowning combat move,
And youths and virgins melt the ſoul to love;
Grief, rage and fear beneath his pencil ſtart,
Roll the wild eye and pour the flowing heart;
While ſlumbering heroes wait his wakening call,
And diſtant ages fill the ſtoried wall.

With rival force, ſee Copley's pencil trace
The air of action and the charms of face;
Fair in his tints unfold the ſcenes of ſtate,
The Senate liſtens and the peers debate;
Pale conſternation every heart appalls,
In act to ſpeak, while death-ſtruck Chatham falls.
His ſtrong, deep ſhades a bold expreſſion give,
Raiſed into light the ſtarting figures live:
With poliſh'd pride the finiſh'd features boaſt,
The maſter's art in nature's ſoftneſs loſt.

Fired with the martial toils, that bathed in gore
His brave companions on his native ſhore

Trumbull with daring hand the ſcene recalls,
He ſhades with night Quebec's beleagur'd walls,
Mid flaſhing flames, that round the turrets riſe,
Blind carnage raves and great Montgomery dies.
On Charleſtown's height, thro' floods of rolling fire,
Brave Warren falls, and ſullen hoſts retire;
While other plains of death, that gloom the ſkies,
And chiefs immortal o'er his canvaſs riſe.
See rural ſeats of innocence and eaſe,
High tufted towers and walks of waving trees,
The white waves daſhing on the craggy ſhores,
Meandering ſtreams and meads of ſpangled flowers,
Where nature's ſons their wild excurſions lead,
In juſt deſign, from Taylor's pencil ſpread.
Steward and Brown the moving portrait raiſe,
Each rival ſtroke the force of life conveys;
See circling Beauties round their tablets ſtand,
And riſe immortal from their plaſtic hand;
Each breathing form preſerves its wonted grace,
And all the ſoul ſtands ſpeaking in the face.
Two kindred arts the ſwelling ſtatue heave,
Wake the dead wax and teach the ſtone to live.
While the bold chiſſel claims the rugged ſtrife,
To rouſe the ſceptred marble into life;
While Latian ſhrines their figured patriots boaſt,
And gods and heroes croud each orient coaſt,
See Wright's fair hands the livlier fire controul,
In waxen forms ſhe breathes the impaſſion'd ſoul;

The pencil'd tint o'er moulded ſubſtance glows,
And different powers the unrivall'd art compoſe.
To equal fame aſcends thy tuneful throng,
The boaſt of genius and the pride of ſong;
Warm'd with the ſcenes that grace their various clime,
Their lays ſhall triumph o'er the lapſe of time.
With keen-eyed glance thro' nature's walks to pierce,
With all the powers and every charm of verſe,
Each ſcience opening in his ample mind,
His fancy glowing and his taſte refined,
See Trumbull lead the train. His ſkillful hand
Hurls the keen darts of Satire thro' the land;
Pride, knavery, dullneſs, feel his mortal ſtings,
And liſtening virtue triumphs while he ſings;
Proud Albion's ſons, victorious now no more,
In guilt retiring from the waſted ſhore,
Strive their curſt cruelties to hide in vain—
The world ſhall learn them from his deathleſs ſtrain.
On glory's wing to raiſe the raviſh'd ſoul,
Beyond the bounds of earth's benighted pole,
For daring Dwight the Epic Muſe ſublime
Hails her new empire on the weſtern clime.
Fired with the themes by ſeers ſeraphic ſung,
Heaven in his eye, and rapture on his tongue,
His voice divine revives the promiſed land,
The Heaven-taught Leader and the choſen band.
In Hanniel's fate, proud faction finds her doom,
Ai's midnight flames light nations to their tomb,

In viſions bright ſupernal joys are given,
And all the dread futurities of heaven.
While freedom's cauſe his patriot boſom warms,
In counſel ſage, nor inexpert in arms,
See Humphreys glorious from the field retire,
Sheathe the glad ſword and ſtring the ſounding lyre;
That lyre which, erſt, in hours of dark deſpair,
Rouſed the ſad realms to urge the unfiniſh'd war.
O'er fallen friends, with all the ſtrength of woe,
His heart-felt ſighs in moving numbers flow;
His country's wrongs, her duties, dangers, praiſe,
Fire his full ſoul and animate his lays;
Immortal Waſhington with joy ſhall own
So fond a favourite and ſo great a ſon.

VISION OF COLUMBUS.

BOOK VIII.

ARGUMENT.

The viſion ſuſpended. Cauſes of the ſlow progreſs of Science and its frequent interruptions. Its ancient compared with its modern eſtabliſhment. Conſequences of the latter. Cauſes of the apparent uncertainty in matters of theology. Superſtition built on the paſſions; ſcepticiſm on the reaſoning power. Neceſſity and happy effect of the united force of reaſon and the paſſions in the diſcovery of truth.

THE VISION OF COLUMBUS.

BOOK VIII.

AND now the Angel, from the trembling ſight,
Veil'd the wide world—when ſudden ſhades of night
Move o'er the etherial vault; the ſtarry train
Paint their dim forms beneath the placid main;
While earth and heaven, around the hero's eye,
Seem arch'd immenſe, like one ſurrounding ſky.
Still, from the Power ſuperior ſplendors ſhone,
The height emblazing like a radiant throne;
To converſe ſweet the ſoothing ſhades invite,
And on the guide the hero fix'd his ſight.

Kind meſſenger of Heaven, he thus began,
Why this progreſſive labouring ſearch of man?
If man by wiſdom form'd hath power to reach
Theſe opening truths that following ages teach,
Step after ſtep, thro' devious mazes, wind,
And fill at laſt the meaſure of the mind,
Why did not Heaven, with one unclouded ray,
All human arts and reaſon's powers diſplay?
That mad opinions, ſects and party ſtrife
Might find no place t'imbitter human life.

To whom the Angelic Power; to thee 'tis given,
To hold high converſe, and enquire of heaven,
To mark uncircled ages and to trace
The unfolding truths that wait thy kindred race.
Know then, the counſels of th' unchanging Mind,
Thro' nature's range, progreſſive paths deſign'd,
Unfiniſh'd works th' harmonious ſyſtem grace,
Thro' all duration and around all ſpace;
Thus beauty, wiſdom, power, their parts unroll,
Till full perfection joins the accordant whole.
So the firſt week, beheld the progreſs riſe,
Which form'd the earth and arch'd th'incumbant ſkies.
Dark and imperfect firſt, the unbeauteous frame,
From vacant night, to crude exiſtence came; [bound,
Light ſtarr'd the heavens and ſuns were taught their
Winds woke their force, and floods their centre found;
Earth's kindred elements, in joyous ſtrife,
Warm'd the glad glebe to vegetable life,
Till ſenſe and power and action claim'd their place,
And godlike reaſon crown'd the imperial race.
Progreſſive thus, from that great ſource above,
Flows the fair fountain of redeeming love.
Dark harbingers of hope, at firſt beſtow'd,
Taught early faith to feel her path to God:
Down the prophetic, brightening train of years,
Conſenting voices roſe of different ſeers,
In ſhadowy types diſplay'd the accompliſh'd plan,
When filial Godhead ſhould aſſume the man,

When the pure Church ſhould ſtretch her arms abroad,
Fair as a bride and liberal as her God;
Till warm benevolence and truth refined,
Pervade the world and harmonize mankind.
And thus fair Science, of celeſtial birth,
With times long circuit, treads the gladſome earth;
By gradual ſteps to mark the extended road,
That leads mankind to reaſon and to God.
In elder times, when ſavage tribes began,
A few ſtrong paſſions ſway'd the wayward man;
Envy, revenge and fateleſs luſt of power
Fired the dark ſoul and ſtain'd the fields with gore.
By jarring ſtrife, all milder joys ſuppreſt,
Loſt their ſoft influence on the furious breaſt
No friendly ties the barbarous feuds aſſuage,
And ceaſeleſs carnage, feeds the brutal rage.
When different tribes, in ſocial bands combined,
Their local views the joyleſs ſoul confined,
Eternal bickerings brutal ſtrength ſupply'd,
Cities are wall'd and warring hoſts divide.
When infant arts, in growing nations, roſe,
They lured the envy of ſurrounding foes;
The ſavage bands united ſieze the prey,
Deſtroy the learning and obſtruct the ſway.
Thus, at the Muſe's call, when Thebes aroſe,
And ſcience ſway'd where nurt'ring Nilus flows.
Rich with the ſpoils of art, fair ſtructures blazed,
And barb'rous nations envy'd as they gazed;

The tempting pyramid, the growing ſtore,
The charm of conqueſt and the graſp of power
Lured the dark world, with envious pride eſtate,
To whelm fair Science in the wrecks of ſtate.
Till Thebes and Memphis nameleſs ruins lie,
And cruſh'd the power that raiſed them to the ſky.
O'er bright Chaldea's plains her vot'ries ſtray,
Deſcribed the ſtars and fix'd their wandering way,
The unclouded ſkies the ſhepherd learn'd to read,
His loves to cheriſh and his flocks to feed;
Till haughty Babel ſtretch'd an envy'd ſway,
And furious millions warr'd the arts away,
Iliſſus' banks diſplay'd a happier ſeat,
Where every Muſe and all the graces meet;
Parnaſſian heights ſhe ſoars; then, ſteering far,
Driven by the cloſe purſuit of vengeful war,
She wings her flight, a weſtern region gams,
And moves in majeſty o'er Latian plains.
But pride and conqueſt follow where ſhe leads,
Her eagle flies, the untutor'd ſavage bleeds,
Rome's haughty Genius, taught by her to ſoar,
With pride of learning ſwells the pride of power;
From Brits, from Scythians plucks the laurel crown,
And deems, by right, the unletter'd world his own.
Till, fired by inſult, vengeful myriads roſe,
And all the north pours forth the ſwarming foes,
Like ſweeping tempeſts in embattled heaven,
When fire and blackneſs ſtreak the ſails of even,

The dark-red hoſts of painted warriors roll,
Rome's thoughtleſs capitol the tempting goal ;
Nor arts they need nor order points thier way,
For arts and order ſwell the Roman ſway ;
Spain, Latium, Afric feed the furious flame,
And hapleſs Science mourns her buried name.
As when the ſun moves o'er the flaming zone,
Careering clouds attend his ſervid throne,
Superior ſplendors, in his courſe diſplay'd,
Proclaim the progreſs of a heavier ſhade ;
Thus where the Power her ancient circuit held,
Her ſhining courſe ſucceeding darkneſs veil'd.
Fear, intereſt, envy bound her laurel'd reign,
A coaſt her walk, the Helleſpont her main,
Ere Goya's trembling ſteel could point the pole,
Or heavens inverted taught thy bark to roll.
At length the ſcene a nobler pomp aſſumes,
A milder beam diſpels the Gothic glooms ;
In ſober majeſty, and charms of peace,
The goddeſs moves, and cheers her filial race,
Lifts bolder wings, with happier flight to ſoar,
No more to reſt till heavens illume no more.
At once, conſenting nations riſe to fame;
Here Charles's genius wakes the Gallic name,
There Alfred aids the univerſal cauſe,
And opes the ſource of liberty and laws ;
Here Greece invites her to her ancient home,
There in rough greatneſs heaves her Gothic dome,

Wide ſpreads her ſway o'er bleſt Arabian plains,
Where her own Caliph, liberal Rachid reigns,
O'er all the climes extends the riſing Power,
From fartheſt Ganges to the Atlantic ſhore.
Even horrid war, that erſt her courſe withſtood,
And whelm'd, ſo oft, her peaceful ſhrines in blood,
Now leads thro' paths unſeen her glorious way,
Extends her limits and confirms her ſway.
See, from all Europe's bounds, the warriors pour,
In crouding millions to the Aſian ſhore;
Mankind their prey, the unmeaning Croſs their pride,
And ſacred vengeance their deluſive guide.
Zeal points their way, thro' famine, toil and blood,
To aid with arms the imagin'd cauſe of God;
Till fields of ſlaughter whelm the broken hoſt,
Their pride appall'd, their countleſs myriads loſt,
The ſad remains to peaceful toils return,
Skill'd in the arts, that eaſtern climes adorn;
O'er Europe's changing ſhores, the charms diſplay
And waſted realms with happier fruits repay,
The rival barons, whom ambition draws,
Their wealth to laviſh in the holy cauſe,
In peace retiring, yield the regal crown,
And blend their counſels to exalt the throne.
While ſlaves, no longer purchaſed with the ſoil,
Waked into freemen, ply the cheerful toil,
Aſſert their rights, extend the royal reign,
And mutual terrors break the feudal chair.

Now growing commerce in firm compact joins
Surrounding nations and their force combines;
From rich Auſonia, bold advent'rers riſe,
Trace midland currents tow'rd the northern ſkies,
Enlarge their navies, and with wealthier train,
Roll with the Rhine and widen with the main;
Then tempt a broader flight, extend the ſail,
Point the ſure compaſs, call a foreign gale,
For ſpicy fruits the orient ſurges brave,
And load with ſparkling gems the liberal wave.
  See Rome once more the unfolding arts attend,
Her groves rewarble and her walls aſcend;
Bologna's learned towers ariſe to fame,
And thine, fair Paris, nobler honours claim;
In rival ſplendor, bright Oxonia, ſmiles,
And ſpreads her bleſſings o'er the Britiſh iſles;
There, like the ſtar that leads the orient day,
Chaucer directs his tuneful ſons their way.
See hapleſs Gallileo's daring ſoul
Explore the ſtars and point their orbs to roll;
And, happier Fauſtus, thy inventive mind
Awakes the unbounded genius of mankind:
O'er wondering climes thy letter'd types diſplay
The works of ſcience and extend her ſway.
  Bold chivalry romantic aids her cauſe;
In honour's name the knight his falchion draws;
Lured by the charms that grace the guardleſs fair,
To ſuffering virtue bends his generous care,

Thro' toil and pain in queſt of glory roves,
Braves death and danger for the maid he loves;
While fired by gallantry, the generous art,
Improves the manners and amends the heart.
When pride and rapine held their vengeful ſway,
And praiſe purſued where conqueſt led the way,
Fair nature's mildeſt grace, the female mind,
By rough-brow'd power neglected and confined,
Unheeded ſigh'd, mid empire's rude alarms,
Unknown its virtues and enſlaved its charms.
So the lone wild-roſe opes the ſweeteſt bloom,
To ſcent the unconſcious thorn, and wither round the tomb.
Bleſt Science then, to rugged toils confined,
Roſe but to conquer and enſlave mankind,
O'er gentle paſſions ſpread a harſh controul,
And waked the glare of grandeur in the ſoul,
She taught the lance to thirſt for human gore,
She taught pale avarice to ſwell the ſtore,
Taught milder arts the peaceful prize to yield,
Her Muſe to thunder thro' the embattled field;
In ruin'd realms to build the ſhrine of fame,
And call celeſtial aid to raiſe a tyrant's name.
In chains and darkneſs mourn'd the hapleſs fair,
The price of gold, the inſulted prize of war,
While ſires, unfeeling, claim'd the ſordid dower,
And nymphs were ſold the ſlaves of luſt and power.
A happier morn now brightens in the ſkies,
Superior arts, in peaceful glory, riſe;

While ſofter virtues claim their guardian care,
And crowns of laurel grace the riſing fair.
With all the raptures of celeſtial fire,
Each rival ſex the rival arts inſpire;
This bids bold commerce load the labouring main,
Or ſwells the peaceful harveſt of the plain,
That leads the hours of calm, domeſtic toil,
And cheers the houſhold with an evening ſmile,
While ſtates and empires, policies and laws
Lure the firm patriot in the bolder cauſe,
To ſtem the tide of power or guide the war,
Like thee to ſuffer and like thee to dare—
With equal honour, as with ſofter grace,
The matron virtues guide the riſing race.

On this broad baſe while Science rears her fane,
New toils and triumphs fill her glorious train,
'Thro' fairer fields ſhe leads the expanding mind,
Glads every clime and dignifies mankind.
Contending kings their views harmonious blend,
With temper'd force their arts and arms extend;
The oppoſing hoſts beneath their liberal reign,
Croud the vaſt wave and glitter o'er the plain,
With thundering engines rend the harmleſs air,
And loſe the horrors in the pomp of war.

See the glad ſage to uſeful labours ſoar,
Tempt other ſeas and unknown worlds explore,
Bid feeble tribes diſplay their powers abroad,
And regions ſmile without the waſte of blood.

Then, while the daring Muſe, from heavenly quires,
With life divine the raptured bard inſpires,
With bolder hand he ſtrikes the trembling ſtring,
Virtues and loves and deeds like thine to ſing.
No more with vengeful chiefs and furious gods,
Old Ocean crimſons and Olympus nods,
Nor heavens, convulſive, rend the dark profound,
Nor Titans groan beneath the heaving ground;
But milder themes ſhall wake the peaceful ſong,
Life in the ſoul and rapture on the tongue;
To moral beauties bid the world attend,
And diſtant lands their ſocial ties extend,
Thro' union'd realms the rage of conqueſt ceaſe,
War ſink in night, and nature ſmile in peace.
Then ſhall he ſoar ſublimer heights, and rove
O'er brighter walks, and happier climes of love;
Rapt into viſion of the bleſt abode,
From Angel-harps to catch the inſpiring God;
Thro' heavens o'ercanopy'd by heavens behold
New ſuns aſcend and other ſkies unfold,
Seraphs and ſyſtem'd worlds around him ſhine,
And lift his mortal ſtrains to harmony divine.

To theſe ſuperior flights, the chief rejoin'd,
If happier years ſhall raiſe the roving mind;
Progreſſive arts exalt the ſoul on high,
Peace rule the earth and faith unfold the ſky;
Say, how ſhall truths like theſe to man be given?
Or ſcience find the limits mark'd by Heaven?

In every age ſince reaſoning pride began,
And heaven's dread Sire reveal'd himſelf to man,
What different faiths the changing race inſpire!
What blind devotions and unhallow'd fire!
What gods of human form and ſavage power
Cold fear could faſhion or mad zeal adore!
Theſe croud their temples, thoſe their names deſpiſe,
In each dire cauſe the exulting martyr dies;
Till, ſenſe renounced, and virtue driven afar,
Rage fires the realms, religion ſounds to war;
And the firſt bleſſing, Heaven for earth deſign'd,
Seems the ſevereſt curſe that waits mankind.

Say then, my guide, if heavenly wiſdom gave
To erring man a life beyond the grave—
If one creative Power, one living ſoul
Produced all beings and preſerves the whole;
Who, throned in light, with full perfection bleſt,
Mid changing worlds, enjoys eternal reſt;
While man, ſtill grovling, paſſionate and blind,
Wars with his neighbour and deſtroys his kind—
Say, what connecting chain, in endleſs line,
Links earth to heaven, and mortal with divine?
Applies alike to every age and clime,
And lifts the ſoul beyond the bounds of time;
And when ſhall ſcience trace the immortal way,
And hail religion in her native day?

The Power return'd. Thy race ſhall ſoon behold
Reaſon refined, and moral lights unroll'd,

While ſcience riſes, freed from pedant pride,
Of truth the ſtandard and of faith the guide.
The paſſions wild, that ſway the changing mind,
The reaſoning powers, her watchful guides deſign'd
Each, unreſtrain'd, alike ſubvert the plan,
Miſlead the judgment and betray the man.
Hence raging zeal, or ſceptic ſcorn prevails,
And arms decide the faith, where wiſdom fails.
Of human paſſions, one above the reſt,
Fear, love, or envy, rules in every breaſt;
And, while it varies with the changing clime,
Now ſtoops to earth, now lifts the ſoul ſublime,
Forms local creeds of ſuperſtitious lore,
Creates the God, and bids the world adore.
Lo! at the Lama's feet, as lord of all,
Age, following age, in dumb devotion fall!
The youthful God, mid ſuppliant kings inſhrined,
Diſpenſing fate and ruling half mankind,
Sits, with contorted limbs, a ſilent ſlave,
An early victim of a ſecret grave.
And, where the moſk's dim arches bend on high,
See the dead prophet mount the mimic ſky;
While pilgrim hoſts, o'er trackleſs deſerts come,
Croud the deep ſhrine, and worſhip round his tomb.
See Memphian altars reek with human gore,
Gods hiſs from caverns, or in cages roar,
Nile pours from heaven a tutulary flood,
And vales produce the vegetable Gods.

Two rival Powers the Magian faith inſpire,
The fire of darkneſs and the ſource of fire:
Evil and good, in theſe contending riſe,
And each, by turns, the ſovereign of the ſkies.
Sun, ſtars and planets round the earth behold
Their fanes of marble and their ſhrines of gold;
The ſea, the grove, the harveſt and the vine
Spring from their Gods, and claim a ſource divine;
While heroes, kings and ſages of their times,
Thoſe Gods on earth, are Gods in happier climes;
Minos in judgment ſits, and Jove in power,
And Odin's friends are feaſted ſtill with gore.

Yet wiſdom's eye with juſt contempt deſcries
Theſe rites abſurd, and bids the world deſpiſe:
Then reaſoning powers o'er paſſion gain the ſway,
And ſhroud in deeper glooms the mental ray.
See the proud ſage, with philoſophic eye,
Rove thro' all climes, and trace the ſtarry ſky,
The ſyſtems mark, their various laws purſue,
The God ſtill riſing to his raptured view;
But what this God? and what the great deſign,
Why creatures live or worlds around him ſhine?
If all perfection dwelt in him alone,
If power, he cries, and wiſdom were his own,
No pain, no guilt, no variance could annoy
The realm of peace, the univerſe of joy.

Yet reaſon here with homeward ken, deſcries
From jarring parts what dark diſorders riſe;

From froſt and fire what ſtorms untemper'd rave!
What plagues, what earthquakes croud the gaping grave!
Pain, toil and torture give the infant breath,
His life is miſery and his portion death.
From moral ills a like deſtruction reigns,
War ſounds the trump, and ſlaughter dyes the plains;
While wrath divine proclaims a heavier doom,
And guilt, aſtoniſh'd, looks beyond the tomb.
Whence theſe unnumber'd cauſeleſs ills, he cries,
Could wiſdom form them? or could love deviſe?
No love, no wiſdom, no conſiſtent plan,
No God in heaven, nor future life to man!
While thus, thro' nature's walks he ſoars on high,
Acquits all guilt, diſpeoples all the ſky,
Denies unſeen exiſtence, and believes
No form beyond what human ſenſe perceives,
An anxious ſearch impels the curious mind,
Its own bright eſſence and its powers to find.
From conſcious thought his reaſoning force he plies,
And deep in ſearch the active ſoul deſcries;
Yet ſenſe and ſubſtance no relation claim,
That dupes the reaſon, this exiſts a name:
All matter, mind, ſenſe, knowledge, pleaſure, pain,
Seem the wild phantoms of the vulgar brain;
Reaſon, collected ſits above the ſcheme,
Proves God and nature but an idle dream,
In one great learned doubt invelopes all,
And whelms it's own exiſtence in the fall,

Theſe wide extremes of paſſion and of pride
A while on earth thy changing race divide;
That man may find his limits and his laws,
Where zeal inflames, or coward caution awes;
And learn, by theſe, the happier courſe to ſteer,
Nor ſink too low, nor mount beyond his ſphere.
And ſoon, that happier courſe thy race ſhall gain,
And zealots rave, and ſceptics doubt, in vain;
While reaſon, ſenſe and paſſion aid the ſoul,
Science her guide and truth the eternal goal.

Firſt, his own powers the man, with care, deſcries,
What nature gives, and various art ſupplies;
Rejects the ties of controverſial rules,
The pride of names, the prejudice of ſchools;
The ſure foundation lays, on which to riſe,
To look thro' earth and meditate the ſkies:
And finds ſome general laws in every breaſt,
Where ethics, faith and politics may reſt.

Of human powers, the Senſes always chief,
Produce inſtruction or inforce belief;
Reaſon, as next in ſway, the balance bears,
Receives their tidings, and with ſkill compares,
Reſtrains wild fancy, calms the impaſſion'd ſoul,
Illumes the judgment and refines the whole.
Senſe, the great ſource of knowledge, ever juſt,
High in command, but faithful to its truſt,
Aid of this life, and ſuited to its place,
Given to ſecure, but not exalt the race;

Deſcries no God, nor claims ſuperior birth,
And knows no life beyond the bounds of earth.
Reaſon, tho' taught by ſenſe to range on high,
To trace the ſtars and meaſure all the ſky;
Tho' fancy, memory, foreſight fill her train,
And o'er the beaſt ſhe lifts the pride of man,
Yet, ſtill to matter, form and ſpace confined,
Or moral truths, or laws that rule mankind,
Could ne'er unaided pierce the mental gloom,
Explore new ſcenes beyond the cloſing tomb,
Reach with immortal hope the bleſt abode,
Or raiſe one thought of ſpirit, or of God.
Yet names of God, and powers of heavenly ſtrain
All nations reverence and all tongues contain;
Thro' every age the conſcious mind perceives,
Reaſon pronounces and the ſenſe believes.
What cauſe myſterious could the thought impart,
Not taught by nature nor acquired hy art?
It ſpeaks of nature's God—no matter when
The name was caught, 'tis never loſt by men;
From clime to clime, from age to age it flies,
Sounds thro' the world and echos to the ſkies.
It proves him, ſelf-reveal'd; and all the plan
On this connexion reſts of God and man.

Obſerve, in man, deſires immortal given,
To range o'er earth and climb a happier heaven;
Yet fear and conſcious guilt his flight reſtrain,
His God offended, and his wiſhes vain:

The wrath divine impending on his breaſt
Precludes the hope of refuge and of reſt;
He ſeeks the fane, obteſts the avenging ſkies,
Pours the full tear, and yields the ſacrifice;
Some foreign aid, ſome mediating grace,
He ſeeks to ſhield him from his Maker's face.
All forms of worſhip, that engage mankind,
In different climes to various Powers confined,
Require of ſuppliants ſome external aid,
Some victim offer'd, or ſome penance paid,
Some middle name, or reconciling plan,
To ſoothe the Godhead and redeem the man.
This thought, ſo wide diffuſed thro' all mankind,
Roſe not from earth, or force of human mind;
From heaven reveal'd, it ſhows ſome ſov'reign ſcheme,
To link this nature with the Power ſupreme.
From guilt and pain to lift the ſoul on high,
And ope a happier ſcene, a world beyond the ſky.
From clime to clime while rove the ſage's eyes,
Books croud on books, and creeds on creeds ariſe.
Reaſon refined with liberal eye ſurveys
The oppoſing faiths and various modes of praiſe;
Yet finds in all, what nature might approve,
A God of juſtice reconciled by love;
With joy beholds the accordant ſcheme of heaven,
Dire vengeance ſooth'd, a mediation given,
Man freed from pain, the ſtains of guilt removed,
To angels liken'd and by Heaven approved;

Death bound in chains from his old empire hurl'd,
And peace and pardon promiſed to the world.
Here ends the toilſome ſearch; in this may reſt
The doubts and fears that move the labouring breaſt;
Theſe few fair truths, to common feeling plain,
The work unfold, and every part ſuſtain.
As, on an arch of ſtone, ſome temple ſtands,
Raiſed to the clouds, and ſhines to diſtant lands;
The firm foundations, open to the ſight,
Croud, as it grows, and ſtrengthen with the weight;
Thus, on the characters of God and man,
By Heaven reveal'd in this conformant plan,
The beauteous ſyſtem reſts; and tho' awhile,
Mad zeal o'erload it, and cold ſcorn revile,
Stands, ſelf-exalted, fill'd with native light,
Firm to the faith, and growing on the ſight.
It ſpeaks one ſimple, univerſal cauſe,
Which time and ſpace from one great centre draws;
Whence this unfolded, that began its flight,
Worlds fill'd the ſkies, and nature roll'd in light;
Whither all beings tend; and where, at laſt,
Their progreſs, changes, imperfections, paſt,
Matter ſhall turn to light, to pleaſure pain,
Strife end in union, angel form in man;
From ſtage to ſtage, from life to life, refined,
All centre, whence they ſprang, in one eternal Mind.
In this harmonious round, united riſe,
Power to create, and wiſdom to deviſe;

While Love ſupreme, before all action, ſtood,
The firſt, the laſt, the chain of general good;
Through nature's range t' extend the ſway divine,
And heaven and earth in mild accordance join;
To one great moral Senſe, all ſenſe to draw,
Strong as neceſſity, and fixt as law.

This branch of Godhead, thro' the ſyſtem known,
Image and brightneſs of the Eternal throne;
By whom all wiſdom ſhines, all power extends,
God ſtands reveal'd and Heaven with nature blends,
Thro' earth and ſkies proclaim'd the indulgent plan,
And ſpoke the law to Angel and to man;
In man's clear view diſplay'd the etherial road,
To love the neighbour and adore the God.
Yet, firm in juſtice as in mercy great,
His ſovereign power directs the ſcenes of fate,
Wide o'er the world with guardian care extends,
Curbs the proud nations and the weak defends;
That feeble faith and boaſting ſcorn may prove
The frown of vengeance, or the ſmile of love,
Holds, in his own right hand, the dreadful doom
Of woes unnumber'd here, and death beyond the tomb

Fill'd with his fire, and guided by his hand,
See the long train of white-robed prophets ſtand!
Thro' opening heaven, their eyes ſublimely roll,
Peace on their tongue, and rapture in their ſoul;
The paſt records, the deeds of unborn time
Flame in their page, and ſhine to every clime:

There, nations read their fate, and kings, to come,
Find, in the leaves, their glory or their doom.
There unborn Cyrus, preordain'd to fame,
On Babel's ruins, builds the Perſian name;
The chief of Macedon, the realm of Greece,
The Latian grandeur, and the Prince of peace,
In order ranged their ſong prophetic grace,
And time ſtands pointing to the deſtined place.
When now, with rolling years theſe deeds of fame
Riſe into light and faith of nations claim.
Behold, on earth the promiſed Prince beſtow'd!
The Virgin's offspring and the filial God;
The appointed ſtar its rapid courſe ſuſpends,
The ſkies unfold, the myſtic dove deſcends,
Glad ſongs attend him, heaven and earth combine,
To hail the new-born babe, and ſpeak his birth divine.
See nature's laws ſuſpended by his power!
Uncloſing graves their ſlumbering dead reſtore,
Winds riſe to waft him, ſtorms, to lull him, ſleep,
He walks the wave, and triumphs o'er the deep;
He dies, he conquers death, aſcends on high,
And riſing ſaints attend him thro' the ſky.
Thus, all the myſtic ſcheme, deſign'd by heaven,
With cleareſt light to ſtedfaſt faith is given;
Here the great moral Senſe, the God conceal'd,
To human ſenſe in earthly form reveal'd,
Suffers in open day, to teach mankind
His ſecret ſufferings in the oppoſer's mind;

To teach how pain and death and endleſs woes,
From wayward ſtrife, and breach of order, roſe;
How each diſcordant wiſh, the ſoul that ſwells,
'Gainſt human bliſs and heavenly power rebels,
Weakens the chain of love, ſubverts the plan,
While nature drives the vengeance back on man.
Here all religion reſts, and ſoon thy race
Her pureſt lights, by wiſdom's eye ſhall trace.
Here the laſt flights of ſcience ſhall aſcend,
To look thro' heaven, and ſenſe with reaſon blend;
View the great ſource of love, that flows abroad,
Spreads to all creatures, centres ſtill in God,
Lives thro' the whole, from nature's compact ſprings,
Orders, reverſes, fills the ſum of things;
In law conſtrains, in goſpel reconciles,
In judgment frowns, in gentle mercy ſmiles,
Commands all ſenſe to feel, all life to prove
The attracting force of univerſal love.

THE VISION OF COLUMBUS.

BOOK IX.

ARGUMENT.

The Viſion reſumed and extended over the whole earth. Preſent character of different nations. Future progreſs of ſociety with reſpect to commerce, diſcoveries, the opening of canals, philoſophical, medical and political knowledge, the aſſimilation and final harmony of all languages. Cauſe of the firſt confuſion of tongues explained, and the effect of their union deſcribed. View of a general council of all nations aſſembled to eſtabliſh the political harmony of mankind. Concluſion.

The VISION of COLUMBUS.

BOOK IX.

NOW, round the yielding canopy of ſhade,
Again the Guide his heavenly power diſplay'd.
Sudden, the ſtars their trembling fires withdrew,
Returning ſplendors burſt upon the view;
Floods of unfolding light the ſkies adorn,
And more than midday glories grace the morn.
So ſhone the earth, as all the ſtarry train,
Broad as full ſuns, had ſail'd the etherial plain;
When no diſtinguiſh'd orb could ſtrike the ſight,
But one clear blaze of all-ſurrounding light
O'erflow'd the vault of heaven. For now, in view
Remoter climes and future ages drew;
While deeds of happier fame, in long array,
Call'd into viſion, fill the new-born day.
Far as the Angelic Power could lift the eye,
Or earth, or ocean bend the yielding ſky;
Or circling ſuns awake the breathing gale,
Drake lead the way, or Cook extend the ſail;
All lands, all ſeas, that boaſt a preſent name,
And all that unborn time ſhall give to fame,

Around the chief in fair expanſion riſe,
And earth's whole circuit bounds the level'd ſkies.
He ſaw the nations tread their different ſhores,
Ply their own toils and claim their local powers.
He mark'd what tribes ſtill rove the ſavage waſte,
What happier realms the ſweets of plenty taſte;
Where arts and virtues fix their golden reign,
Or peace adorns, or ſlaughter dyes the plain.
He ſaw the reſtleſs Tartar, proud to roam,
Move with his herds, and ſpread his tranſient home;
Thro' the vaſt tracts of China's fixt domain,
The ſons of dull contentment plough the plain;
The gloomy Turk aſcends the blood-ſtain'd car,
And Ruſſian banners ſhade the plains of war;
Brazilia's wilds and Afric's burning ſands
With bickering ſtrife inflame the furious bands;
On bleſt Atlantic iſles, and Europe's ſhores,
Proud wealth and commerce heap their growing ſtores,
While his own weſtern world, in proſpect fair,
Calms her brave ſons, now breathing from the war,
Unfolds her harbours, ſpreads the genial ſoil,
And welcomes freemen to the cheerful toil.
When thus the Power. In this extended view,
Behold the paths thy changing race purſue.
See, thro' the whole, the ſame progreſſive plan,
That draws, for mutual ſuccour, man to man,
From friends to tribes, from tribes to realms aſcend,
Their powers, their intereſts and their paſſions blend;

Adorn their manners, ſocial virtues ſpread,
Enlarge their compacts and extend their trade;
While chiefs like thee, with perſevering ſoul,
Bid venturous barks to new diſcoveries roll;
High in the north, and tow'rd the ſouthern ſkies,
New iſles and nations greet the roving eyes;
Till each remoteſt realm, by friendſhip join'd,
Links in the chain that binds all human kind,
The union'd banners riſe at laſt unfurl'd,
And wave triumphant round the accordant world.

As ſmall ſwift ſtreams their furious courſe impel,
Till meeting waves their winding currents ſwell;
Then widening ſweep thro' each deſcending plain,
And move majeſtic to the boundleſs main;
'Tis thus ſociety's ſmall ſources riſe;
Through paſſions wild their devious progreſs lies;
Intereſt and faith and pride and power withſtand,
And mutual ills the growing views expand;
Till tribes and ſtates and empires find their place,
*And one wide intereſt ſways the peaceful race.

* Since finiſhing the Poem (the whole of which, except a ſmall part of the ſeventh Book, was written previous to the concluſion of the late war) the Author is happy to find that his general ideas, reſpecting the future progreſs and final perfection of human ſociety, are ſupported by thoſe of ſo reſpectable a Character as Dr. Price. In his Obſervations on the Importance of the American Revolution, he remarks, "That Reaſon, as well as Tradition and Revelation, "lead us to expect that a more improved and happy ſtate of hu-"man affairs will take place before the final conſummation of all "things. The world has been hitherto gradually improving; "light and knowledge have been gaining ground, and human life

And ſee, in haſte, the aſcending ſcenes advance,
The ports unfold, the glimmering navies dance;

" at preſent, compared with what it once was, is much the ſame " that a youth approaching to manhood is, compared with an in- " fant."

It has long been the opinion of the Author, that ſuch a ſtate of peace and happineſs as is foretold in ſcripture and commonly called the millennial period, may be rationally expected to be introduced without a miracle. Nec deus interſit niſi dignus vindice nodus, is a maxim, as uſeful to a Chriſtian Philoſopher as to a Heathen Poet. Although, from the hiſtory of mankind, it appears, that the progreſs of improvement has been ſlow and often interrupted, yet it gives pleaſure to obſerve the cauſes of theſe interruptions, and to diſcern the end they were deſigned in the courſe of Providence to anſwer, in accelerating the ſame events, which they ſeemed for awhile to retard. The ſtate of the arts among the ancients, viewed with reference to the event under conſideration, was faulty or rather unfortunate in two particulars; firſt, in their comparative eſtimation; and ſecondly, in their not flouriſhing in more than one nation at a time. Theſe circumſtances were highly favourable to the exertions of individual genius, and may be aſſigned both as cauſes of the univerſal deſtruction of the arts by the Gothic conqueſt, and as reaſons why we ſhould not greatly lament that deſtruction. From the ſituation of mankind in the days of ancient literature, it was natural that thoſe arts which depend on the imagination, ſuch as Architecture, Statuary, Painting, Eloquence and Poetry, ſhould claim the higheſt rank in the eſtimation of a people. In ſeveral, and perhaps all of theſe, the ancients remain unrivaled. But theſe are not the arts which tend greatly to the general improvement of mankind. The man, who in thoſe days could have aſcertained the true figure of the earth, would have rendered more ſervice to the world, than he that could originate a heaven and fill it with all the Gods of Homer; and had the expences of the Egyptian pyramids been employed in furniſhing fleets of diſcovery, to be ſent out of the Mediterranian, the civilized world would probably never have been overrun by Barbarians. But the ſciences of Geography Navigation and Commerce, with all their conſequential improvements in natural philoſophy and humanity, could not, from the nature of things, be objects of great encouragement or enterprize among the ancients. They therefore turned their attention to the cultivation of arts more ſtriking to the ſenſes; ſuch as require the ſtrongeſt exertion of the human genius, and would be entitled to the higheſt rank in any age of univerſal refinement. As theſe arts were adapted to gratify the vanity of a prince, to fire the ambition of a hero, or to gain a point in a popular aſſembly, they were carried to a degree of perfection, which prevented their being reliſhed or underſtood by barbarians. The literature of the world therefore deſcended with the line of conqueſt from one nation to another, till the whole was ſwallowed up in the Roman Empire. There its tendency was to inſpire a contempt for nations leſs civilized, and to induce the Romans to conſider all mankind as the objects of their inſult, and all countries as the ſcenes of their military parade. Theſe circumſtances, through a courſe of ages, prepared and finally opened a ſcene of wretchedneſs, at which the human mind has been taught to ſhudder, but it was wiſely calculated to reduce mankind to a ſituation, capable of commencing regular and extenſive improvements. And, however novel the ſentiment may appear, yet the Author will venture to aſſert, that, as to the proſpect of univerſal civilization, mankind were in a much more eligible ſituation in the time of Charlemagne than they were in the days of Auguſtus. The final deſtruction of the Roman empire left the nations of Europe in circumſtances ſimilar to each other; and their conſequent rivalſhip prevented any diſproportionate refinement from appearing in any particular region. The ſeeds of government, firmly rooted in the principles of the feudal ſyſtem, laid the foundation of that balance of Power, which diſcourages the Cæſars and Alexanders of mankind from attempting the conqueſt of the world.

For commerce arm'd the different Powers combine,

It ſeems neceſſary, that the arrangement of events in civilizing the world ſhould be in the following order. Firſt, all parts of it muſt be conſiderably peopled; ſecondly, the different nations muſt be known to each other; and thirdly, their imaginary wants muſt be increaſed, in order to inſpire a paſſion for commerce. The firſt of theſe objects, was probably not accompliſhed till a late period. The ſecond, for three centuries paſt, has been greatly accelerated, but is now very far from being completely obtained. The third is always a neceſſary conſequence of the two former. The ſpirit of commerce is happily calculated by the Author of wiſdom to open an amicable intercourſe between all countries, to ſoften the horrors of war, to enlarge the field of ſcience and ſpeculation, and to aſſimilate the manners, feelings and languages of all nations. This leading principle, in its remoter conſequences, will produce a thouſand advantages in favour of government and legiſlation, give Patriotiſm the air of Philanthropy, induce all men to regard each other as brethren and friends, eradicate all kinds of literary, religious and political ſuperſtition, prepare the minds of all mankind for the rational reception of moral and religious truth, and finally evince that ſuch a ſyſtem of Providence, as appears in the unfolding of

Tho' jarring realms, awhile the combat wage,
And hold in lingering ſtrife, the unſettled age;
Yet no rude war, that ſweeps the crimſon plain,
Shall dare diſturb the labours of the main.
For Heaven impartial ſpread the watery way,
Liberal as air and unconfined as day;
That every diſtant land the wealth might ſhare,
Exchange their fruits and fill their treaſures there;
Their ſpeech aſſimilate, their empires blend,
And mutual intereſt fix the mutual friend.

The hero look'd: beneath his wondering eyes,
Bright ſtreamers lengthen round the ſeas and ſkies;
The countleſs nations open all their ſtores,
Load every wave and croud the maſted ſhores;
The ſails, in mingling mazes, ſweep the air,
And commerce triumphs o'er the rage of war.

theſe events, is the beſt poſſible ſyſtem to produce the happineſs of creatures. I conceive it is no objection to this plan, that the progreſs has hitherto been ſlow; when we conſider the vaſt magnitude of the object, the obſtructions to be removed, and the great length of time that will probably be taken to accompliſh it. To reſume the compariſon of Doctor Price, perhaps the world can hardly be ſaid as yet to be "approaching to manhood"; probably we are rather riſing out of infancy; we have not yet been able to wander over the whole houſe and obſerve upon the furniture. It is poſſible that ſome conſiderable revolutions are yet to happen, before the progreſs will be entirely free from embarraſments. But the general ſyſtem appears ſo rational and complete, that it furniſhes a new ſource of ſatisfaction, in contemplating the apparent diſpenſations of Heaven.

The author firſt ventured upon theſe ideas, in the courſe of the Poem, with all the timidity of youth; determining not to riſk a ſerious illuſtration of the ſentiment in proſe. But finding that a theory ſo pleaſing to himſelf has not been unnoticed by others, he feels a greater confidence in the ſubject, and hopes the importance of it will apologize to the reader for ſo lengthy a note.

From Baltic ſtreams, that ſwell in lonely pride,
From Rhine's long courſe, and Texel's labouring tide,
From Gallia's coaſt, from Albion's hoary height,
And fair Hibernia, clothed in purer light,
Hiſpania's ſtrand, that two broad oceans lave,
From Senegal's and Tagus' winding wave,
The gathering maſts, in peaceful ſquadrons, riſe,
And wave their cloudly curtains to the ſkies.
Thro' the deep ſtrait that leads the midland tide,
The ſails look forth and ſwell their beauteous pride;
Where Aſia's iſles and utmoſt ſhores extend,
Like riſing ſuns, the ſheeted maſts aſcend,
And join with peaceful toil the friendly train,
No more to combat on the liquid plain.
In diſtant glory, where the watery way
Spreads the blue borders of deſcending day,
The flowing flags unfold, in lengthening ſweep,
Pride of the world and daughters of the deep.
From Arctic heavens, and deep in ſouthern ſkies,
Where froſt recedes as blooms of culture riſe—
Where eaſtern Amur's lengthening current glides,
Where California breaks the billowy tides,
Peruvian ſtreams their golden margins boaſt,
And ſpreading Chili leads the channel'd coaſt,
The pinions ſwell; till all the cloud-like train,
From pole to pole, o'erſhades the whitening main.
So ſome imperial Seraph, placed on high,
From heaven's ſublimeſt tower o'erlook'd the ſky;

When ſpace unfolding heard the voice of God,
And ſuns and ſtars and ſyſtems roll'd abroad,
Caught their firſt ſplendors from the all-beaming Eye
Began their years, and vaulted round the ſky;
Their mingling ſpheres in bright confuſion play,
Exchange their beams and fill the new-born day.
He ſaw, as widely ſpreads the unchannel'd plain,
Where inland realms for ages bloom'd in vain,
Canals, long-winding, ope a watery flight,
And diſtant ſtreams and ſeas and lakes unite,
Where Darien hills o'erlook the gulphy tide,
By human art, the ridgy banks divide;
Aſcending ſails the opening paſs purſue,
And waft the ſparkling treaſures of Peru.
Jeneiro's ſtream from Plata winds his way,
And bold Madera opes from Paraguay.
From fair Albania, tow'rd the falling ſun,
Back thro' the midland, lengthening channels run,
Meet the far lakes, their beauteous towns that lave,
And Hudſon join to broad Ohio's wave.
From dim Superior, whoſe unfathom'd ſea
Drinks the mild ſplendors of the ſetting day,
New paths, unfolding, lead their watery pride,
And towns and empires riſe along their ſide;
To Miſſiſippi's ſource the paſſes bend,
And to the broad Pacific main extend.
From the red banks of bleſt Arabia's tide,
Thro' the dread Iſthmus, waves unwonted glide;

From Europe's crouded coaſts while bounding ſails
Look through the paſs and call the Aſian gales.
Volga and Oby diſtant oceans join,
And the long Danube meets the rolling Rhine;
While other ſtreams that cleave the midland plain,
Spread their new courſes to the diſtant main.
He ſaw the aſpiring genius of the age
Soar in the bard and ſtrengthen in the ſage;
With daring thought thro' time's long flight extend,
Rove the wide earth and with the heaven aſcend;
Bid each fond wiſh, that leads the ſoul abroad,
Breathe to all men, to nature and to God.
He ſaw, where pale diſeaſes, wont to brave
The pride of art, and croud the untimely grave,
With long-wrought life the nations learn to glow,
And blooming health adorn the locks of ſnow,
A countleſs train the healing ſcience aid,
Its power eſtabliſh and its bleſſings ſpread;
In every ſhape, that varying matter gives,
That reſts or ripens, vegetates or lives,
By chymic power the ſprings of health they trace,
And add new beauties to the joyous race.
While thus the realms their mutual glories lend,
Unnumber'd ſires the cares of ſtate attend;
Bleſt with each human art, and ſkill'd to find,
Each wild device that prompts the wayward mind;
What ſoft reſtraints the untemper'd breaſt requires,
To caſte new joys and cheriſh new deſires,

Expand the ſelfiſh to the ſocial flame,
And fire the ſoul to deeds of nobler fame.
They ſee, in all the boaſted paths of praiſe,
What partial views heroic ardor raiſe;
What mighty ſtates on others' ruins ſtood,
And built, ſecure, their haughty ſeats in blood;
How public virtue's ever-borrow'd name
With proud applauſe hath graced the deeds of ſhame,
Bade Rome's imperial ſtandard wave ſublime,
And patriot ſlaughter ſpread to every clime;
From chief to chief, the kindling ſpirit ran,
The heirs of fame and enemies of man.
Where Grecian ſtates in even balance hung,
And warm'd with jealous fires the ſage's tongue,
The excluſive ardor cheriſh'd in the breaſt
Love to one land, and hatred to the reſt.
And where the flames of civil diſcord rage,
And kindred arms deſtructive combat wage,
The unchanging virtue riſes, ſtill the ſame,
To build a Cromwell's as a Charles's name,
No more the noble patriotic mind,
To narrow views and local laws confined,
'Gainſt neighbouring lands directs the public rage,
Plods for a realm or counſels for an age;
But lifts a larger thought, and reaches far,
Beyond the power, beyond the wiſh of war;
For realms and ages forms the general aim,
Makes patriot views and moral views the ſame,

Sees with prophetic eye in peace combined,
The ſtrength and happineſs of human-kind.
Now had the hero, with delighted eye,
Roved o'er the climes, that lengthen'd round the ſky;
When the bleſt Guide his heavenly power diſplay'd,
The earth all trembles and the viſions fade:
Thro' other ſcenes deſcending ages roll,
And ſtill new wonders open on his ſoul.
Again his view the range of nature bounds,
Confines the concave and the world ſurrounds;
When the wide nations all ariſe more near,
And a mixt tumult murmurs in his ear.
At firſt, like heavy thunders, borne, afar,
Or the dire conflict of a moving war,
Or waves reſounding on the craggy ſhore,
Hoarſe roll'd the loud-toned undulating roar.
At length the ſounds, like human voices, riſe,
And different nations' undiſtinguiſh'd cries
Flow from all climes around in wild career,
And grate harſh diſcord in the aching ear.
Now more diſtinct the wide concuſſion, grown,
Rolls forth, at times, an accent like his own;
While thouſand tongues from different regions pour,
And drown all words in one convulſing roar.
By turns the ſounds aſſimilating riſe,
And ſmoother voices gain upon the ſkies;
Mingling and ſoftening ſtill, in every gale,
O'er the harſh tones harmonious ſtrains prevail.

At laſt a ſimple, univerſal ſound
Fills every clime and ſoothes the world around;
From echoing ſhores the ſwelling ſtrain replies,
And moves melodious o'er the warbling ſkies.
Such wild commotions as he heard and view'd,
In fixt aſtoniſhment the hero ſtood,
And thus beſought the Guide: Celeſtial friend,
What good to man can theſe dread ſcenes intend?
What dire diſtreſs attends that boding ſound,
That breathes hoarſe thunder o'er the trembling ground?
War ſure has ceaſed; or have my erring eyes
Miſread the glorious viſions of the ſkies?
Tell then, my Seer, if future earthquakes ſleep,
Cloſed in the conſcious caverns of the deep,
Waiting the day of vengeance, when to roll,
And rock the rending pillars of the pole?
Or tell if ought, more dreadful to my race,
In theſe dark ſigns, thy heavenly wiſdom trace?
And why the wild confuſion melts again,
In the ſmooth glidings of a tuneful ſtrain?
The voice of Heaven replied; Thy fears give o'er;
The rage of war ſhall ſweep the plains no more;
No dire diſtreſs theſe ſtrange events foredoom,
But give the marks of nobler joys to come;
The tongues of nations, here, harmonious blend,
Till one pure language thro' the earth extend.
Thou knoweſt, when impious Babel dared ariſe,
With ſacred rites to grace the ſtarry ſkies,

Tumultuous diſcord ſeized the trembling bands,
Oppoſed their labours and unnerved their hands,
Diſperſed the bickering tribes, and drove them far,
To roam the waſte and fire their ſouls for war;
Bade kings ariſe, and from their ſeats be hurl'd,
And pride and conqueſt range the extended world.
In this the marks of heavenly wiſdom ſhine,
And ſpeak the counſel, as the hand, divine.
In that far age, when o'er the world's broad waſte,
Surrounding ſhades their gloomy horrors caſt,
If men, while pride and power the breaſt inflamed,
By ſpeech allied, one natal region claim'd,
No timorous tribe a different clime would gain,
Or lift the ſail, or dare the billowy main.
Fixt in a central ſpot their luſt of power
Would rage inſatiate, and the race devour;
A howling waſte the unpeopled world remain;
And oceans roll, and climes extend in vain.
Far other counſels, in the Eternal Mind,
Lead on the unconſcious ſteps of human kind;
O'errule the ills their daring crimes produce,
By ways unſeen, to ſerve the happieſt uſe.
For this, the early tribes were taught to range,
For this, their language and their laws to change;
Tempt the wide wave and warm the genial ſoil,
To crown with fruits the hardy hand of toil,
Divide their forces, wheel the conquering car,
Deal mutual death, and civilize by war.

And now the effects, thro' every land, extend,
Theſe dread events have found their fated end;
Unnumber'd tribes have dared the ſavage wood,
And ſtreams unnumber'd ſwell'd with human blood,
Increaſing nations with the years of time,
Spread their wide walks to each delighted clime,
To mutual wants their barter'd tributes paid,
Their counſels ſoften'd and their wars allay'd;
While powerful commerce bids the flag unroll,
And wave the union of the accordant whole.

At this bleſt period, when thy peaceful race
Shall ſpeak one language and one cauſe embrace,
Science and arts a ſpeedier courſe ſhall find,
And open earlier on the infant mind,
No foreign terms ſhall croud with barbarous rules,
The dull, unmeaning pageantry of ſchools;
Nor dark authorities, nor names unknown
Fill the learn'd head with ign'rance not its own;
But truth's fair eye, with beams unclouded, ſhine,
And ſimpleſt rules her moral lights confine;
One living language, one unborrow'd dreſs
Her boldeſt flights with happieſt force expreſs;
Triumphant virtue, in the garb of truth,
Win a pure paſſage to the heart of youth,
Pervade all climes, where ſuns or oceans roll,
And bid the goſpel cheer the illumined whole.
As the glad day-ſtar, on his golden throne,
Fair type of truth and promiſe of the ſun,

Smiles up the orient, in his roſy ray,
Illumes the front of heaven, and leads the day;
Thus ſoaring Science daughter of the ſkies,
Firſt o'er the nations bids her beauties riſe,
Prepares the glorious way, to pour abroad
The beams of Heaven's own morn, the ſplendors of a
Then bleſt Religion leads the raptured mind, [God.
Thro' brighter fields and pleaſures more refined;
Teaches the roving eye, at one broad view,
To glance o'er time and look Exiſtence thro',
See worlds, and worlds, to Being's formleſs end,
With all their hoſts, on one dread Power depend,
Seraphs and ſuns and ſyſtems round him riſe,
Live in his life and kindle from his eyes,
His boundleſs love, his all-pervading ſoul
Illume, ſublime and harmonize the whole;
Teaches the pride of man to fix its bound,
In one ſmall point of this amazing round;
To ſhrink and reſt, where Heaven has fix'd its fate,
A line its ſpace, a moment for its date;
Inſtructs the heart a nobler joy to taſte,
And ſhare its feelings with another's breaſt,
Extend its warmeſt wiſh for all mankind,
And catch the image of the Maker's mind;
While mutual love commands all ſtrife to ceaſe,
And earth join joyous in the ſongs of peace.
Thus heard the chief, impatient to behold
The expected years, in all their charms, unfold;

The ſoul ſtood ſpeaking thro' his gazing eyes,
And thus his voice; Oh, bid the viſions riſe!
Command, celeſtial guide, from each far pole,
The bliſsful morn to open on my ſoul;
And lift thoſe ſcenes, that ages fold in night,
Living, and glorious, to my longing ſight;
Let heaven, unfolding, ope the eternal throne,
And all the concave flame in one clear ſun;
On clouds of fire, with Angels at his ſide,
The Prince of peace, the King of Salem ride,
With ſmiles of love to greet the raptured earth,
Call ſlumbering ages to a ſecond birth;
With all his white-robed millions fill the train,
And here commence the interminable reign.
Such views, the Power replies, would drown thy ſight,
And ſeal thy viſions in eternal night;
Nor Heaven permits, nor Angels can diſplay
The unborn glories of that bliſsful day.
Enough for thee, that thy delighted mind,
Should trace the deeds and bleſſings of thy kind;
That time's deſcending vale ſhould ope ſo far,
Beyond the reach of wretchedneſs and war;
Till all the paths in Heaven's extended plan,
Fair in thy view ſhould lead the ſteps of man;
To form, at laſt, in earth's benighted ball,
Union of parts and happineſs of all.
To thy glad view theſe rolling ſcenes have ſhown,
What boundleſs bleſſings thy vaſt labours crown;

That, with the joys of unborn ages bleſt,
Thy ſoul, exulting, may retire to reſt,
And find, in regions of unclouded day,
What heaven's bright walks and endleſs years diſplay.
Behold, once more, around the earth and ſky,
The laſt glad viſions wait thy raptured eye.
The great Obſerver look'd; the land and ſea,
In ſolemn grandeur, ſtretch'd beneath him, lay;
Here ſwell the mountains, there the oceans roll,
And beams of beauty kindle round the pole.
O'er all the range, where coaſts and climes extend,
In glorious pomp the works of peace aſcend.
Robed in the bloom of ſpring's eternal year,
And ripe with fruits, the ſame glad fields appear,
On each long ſtrand unnumber'd cities run,
Bend their bright walls and ſparkle to the ſun;
The ſtreams, all freighted from the bounteous plain,
Swell with the load and labour to the main;
Where widening waves command a bolder gale,
And prop the pinions of a broader ſail:
Sway'd with the floating weight, the ocean toils,
And joyous nature's laſt perfection ſmiles.
Now, fair beneath his view, the important age
Leads the bold actors on a broader ſtage;
When, clothed majeſtic in the robes of ſtate,
Moved by one voice, in general council meet
The fathers of all empires: 'twas the place,
Near the firſt footſteps of the human race;

Where wretched men, firſt wandering from their God,
Began their feuds and led their tribes abroad.
In this mid region, this delightful clime,
Rear'd by whole realms, to brave the wrecks of time,
A ſpacious ſtructure roſe, ſublimely great,
The laſt reſort, the unchanging ſcene of ſtate.
On rocks of adamant the walls aſcend,
Tall columns heave, and Parian arches bend;
High o'er the golden roofs, the riſing ſpires,
Far in the concave meet the ſolar fires;
Four blazing fronts, with gates unfolding high,
Look, with immortal ſplendor, round the ſky:
Hither the delegated fires aſcend,
And all the cares of every clime attend.
As the fair firſt-born meſſengers of heaven,
To whom the care of ſtars and ſuns is given,
When the laſt circuit of their winding ſpheres
Hath finiſh'd time and mark'd their ſum of years,
From all the bounds of ſpace (their labours done)
Shall wing their triumphs to the eternal throne;
Each, from his far dim ſky, illumes the road,
And ſails and centres tow'rd the mount of God;
There, in mid heaven, their honour'd ſeats to ſpread,
And ope the untarniſh'd volumes of the dead:
So, from all climes of earth, where nations riſe,
Or lands or oceans bound the incumbent ſkies,
Wing'd with unwonted ſpeed, the gathering throng
In ſhips and chariots, ſhape their courſe along;

Till, wide o'er earth and ſea, they win their way,
Where the bold ſtructure flames againſt the day;
There, hail the ſplendid ſeat by Heaven aſſign'd,
To hear and give the counſels of mankind.
Now the dread concourſe, in the ample dome,
Pour thro' the arches and their ſeats aſſume;
Far as the extended eye can range around,
Or the deep trumpet's ſolemn voice reſound,
Long rows of reverend ſires, ſublime, extend,
And cares of worlds on every brow ſuſpend.
High in the front, for manlier virtues known,
A ſire elect, in peerleſs grandeur, ſhone;
And riſing oped the univerſal cauſe,
To give each realm its limit and its laws;
Bid the laſt breath of dire contention ceaſe,
And bind all regions in the leagues of peace,
Bid one great empire, with extenſive ſway,
Spread with the ſun and bound the walks of day,
One centred ſyſtem, one all-ruling ſoul,
Live thro' the parts, and regulate the whole.
Here, ſaid the Angel with a bliſsful ſmile,
Behold the fruits of thy unwearied toil.
To yon far regions of deſcending day,
Thy ſwelling pinions led the untrodden way,
And taught mankind adventurous deeds to dare,
To trace new ſeas and peaceful empires rear;
Hence, round the globe, their rival ſails, unfurl'd,
Have waved, at laſt, in union o'er the world.

Let thy delighted ſoul no more complain,
Of dangers braved and griefs endured in vain,
Of courts inſidious, envy's poiſon'd ſtings,
The loſs of empire and the frown of kings;
While theſe bright ſcenes thy glowing thoughts com-
To ſpurn the vengeance of inſulting foes; [poſe,
And all the joys, deſcending ages gain,
Repay thy labours and remove thy pain.

PREFACE.

IN preparing this work for publication it seems proper to offer some observations explanatory of its design. The classical reader will perceive the obstacles which necessarily presented themselves in reconciling the nature of the subject with such a manner of treating it as should appear the most poetical, and at the same time the most likely to arrive at that degree of dignity and usefulness to which it ought to aspire.

The Columbiad is a patriotic poem; the subject is national and historical. Thus far it must be interesting to my countrymen. But most of the events were so recent, so important and so well known, as to render them inflexible to the hand of fiction. The poem, therefore, could not with propriety be modelled after that regular epic form which the more splendid works of this kind have taken, and on which their success is supposed in a great measure to depend. The attempt would have been highly injudicious; it must have diminished and debased a series of actions which were really great in themselves and could not be disfigured without losing their interest.

I shall enter into no discussion on the nature of the epopea, nor attempt to prove by any latitude of reasoning that I have written an Epic Poem. The subject indeed is vast; far superior to any of those on which the celebrated poems of this description have been constructed; and I have no doubt but the form I have given to the work is the best that the subject would admit. It may be added, that in no poem are the unities of time, place and action more rigidly observed: the action, in the technical sense of the word, consisting only of what takes place between Columbus and Hesper; which must be supposed to occupy but few hours, and is confined to the prison and the mount of vision.

But these circumstances of classical regularity are of little consideration in estimating the real merit of any work of this nature. Its merit must depend on the importance of the action, the disposition of the parts, the invention and application of incidents, the propriety of the illustrations, the liveliness and chastity of the images, the suitable intervention of machinery, the moral tendency of the manners, the strength and sublimity of the sentiments; the whole being clothed in language whose energy, harmony and elegance shall constitute a style every where suited to the matter they have to treat.

It is impossible for me to determine how far I may have succeeded in any of these particulars. This must be decided by others, the result of whose decision I shall never know. But there is one point of view in which I wish the reader to place the character of my work, before he pronounces on its merit: I mean its political tendency. There are two distinct objects to be kept in view in the conduct of a narrative poem: the poetical object and the moral object. The poetical is the fictitious design of the action; the moral is the real design of the poem.

In the Iliad of Homer the poetical object is to kindle, nourish, sustain and allay the anger of Achilles. This end is constantly kept in view; and the action proper to attain it is conducted with wonderful judgment thro a long series of incidents, which elevate the mind of the reader, and excite not only a veneration for the creative powers of the poet, but an ardent emulation of his heroes, a desire to imitate and rival some of the great actors in the splendid scene; perhaps to endeavor to carry into real life the fictions with which we are so much enchanted.

Such a high degree of interest excited by the first object above mentioned, the fictitious design of the action, would make it extremely important that the second object, the real design of the poem, should be beneficial to society. But the real design in the Iliad was directly the reverse. Its obvious tendency was to inflame the minds of young readers with an enthusiastic ardor for military fame; to inculcate the pernicious doctrine of the divine right of kings; to teach both prince and people that military plunder was the most honorable mode of acquiring property; and that conquest, violence and war were the best employment of nations, the most glorious prerogative of bodily strength and of cultivated mind.

How much of the fatal policy of states, and of the miseries and degradations of social man, have been occasioned by the false notions of honor inspired by the works of Homer, it is not easy to ascertain. The probability is, that however astonishing they are as monuments of human intellect, and how long soever they have been the subject of universal praise, they have unhappily done more harm than good. My veneration for his genius is equal to that of his most idolatrous readers; but my reflections on the history of human errors have forced upon me the opinion that his existence has really proved one of the signal misfortunes of mankind.

The moral tendency of the Eneid of Virgil is nearly as pernicious as that of the works of Homer. Its poetical or fictitious design, the settlement of his hero in Italy, is well delineated and steadily pursued. This object must have been far more interesting to the Romans than the anger of Achilles could have been to the Greeks. Had Virgil written his poem one or two centuries earlier than he did, while his countrymen felt that they had a country and were not themselves the property of a master, they must have glowed with enthusiasm in reciting the fabulous labors of their ancestors, and adored the songster who could have thus elevated so endearing a subject; who could have adorned it with such an interesting variety of incidents, such weight of pathos, such majesty of sentiment and harmony of verse. But Virgil wrote and felt like a subject, not like a citizen. The real design of his poem was to increase the veneration of the people for a master, whoever he might be, and to encourage like Homer the great system of military depredation.

Lucan is the only republican among the ancient epic poets. But the action of his rambling tho majestic poem is so badly arranged as to destroy, in a poetical sense, the life and interest of the great national subject on which it is founded; at the same time that it abounds in the most exalted sentiments and original views of manners, highly favorable to the love of justice and the detestation of war. If a mind, formed like that of Lucan, as to its moral and political cast, and endowed with the creative energy of Homer, had sung to the early Greeks the fall of Troy or the labors of Hercules, his work (taking the place which those of Homer have unfortunately occupied) as a splendid model for all succeeding ages, would have given a very different turn to the pursuits of heroes and the policy of nations. Ambition might then have become an useful passion, instead of a destructive disease.

In the poem here presented to the public the objects, as in other works of the kind, are two: the fictitious object of the action and the real object of the poem. The first of these is to sooth and satisfy the desponding mind of Columbus; to show him that his labors, tho ill rewarded by his cotemporaries, had not been performed in vain; that he had opened the way to the most extensive career of civilization and public happiness; and that he would one day be recognised as the author of the greatest benefits to the human race. This object is steadily kept in view; and the actions, images and sentiments are so disposed as probably to attain the end. But the real object of the poem embraces a larger scope: it is to inculcate the love of rational liberty, and to discountenance the deleterious passion for violence and war; to show that on the basis of the republican principle all good morals, as well as good government and hopes of permanent peace, must be founded; and to convince the student in political science that the theoretical question of the future advancement of human society, till states as well as individuals arrive at universal civilization, is held in dispute and still unsettled only because we have had too little experience of organised liberty in the government of nations to have well considered its effects.

I cannot expect that every reader, nor even every republican reader, will join me in opinion with respect to the future progress of society and the civilization of states; but there are two sentiments in which I think all men will agree: that the event is desirable, and that to believe it practicable is one step towards rendering it so. This being the case they ought to pardon a writer, if not applaud him, for endeavoring to inculcate this belief.

I have taken the liberty, notwithstanding the recency of the events, to make some changes in the order of several of the principal battles described in this poem. I have associated the actions of Starke, Herkimer, Brown and Francis in the battle of Saratoga, tho they happened at some distance from that battle, both as to time and place. A like circumstance will be noticed with respect to Sumter, Jackson of Georgia and some others in the battle of Eutaw. I have supposed a citadel mined and blown up in the siege of York, and two ships of war grappled and blown up in the naval battle of De Grasse and Graves.

It is presumed that these circumstances require no apology; as in the two latter cases the events are incidental to such situations, and they here serve the principal purpose, being meant to increase our natural horror for the havoc and miseries of war in general. And with regard to the two former cases we ought to consider that, in the epic field, the interest to be excited by the action cannot be sustained by following the gazette, as Lucan has done. The desultory parts of the historical action must be brought together and be made to elevate and strengthen each other, so as to press upon the mind with the full force of their symmetry and unity. Where the events are recent and the actors known, the only duty imposed by that circumstance on the poet is to do them historical justice, and not ascribe to one hero the actions of another. But the scales of justice in this case are not necessarily accompanied by the calendar and the map.

It will occur to most of my readers that the modern modes of fighting, as likewise the instruments and terms now used in war, are not yet rendered familiar in poetical language. It is doubtless from an unwarrantable timidity, or want of confidence in their own powers of description, that modern poets have made so little use of this kind of riches that lay before them. I confess that I imbibed the common prejudice, and remained a long time in the error of supposing that the ancients had a poetical advantage over us in respect to the dignity of the names of the weapons used in war, if not in their number and variety. And when I published a sketch of the present poem, under the title of The Vision of Columbus, I labored under the embarrassment of that idea. I am now convinced that the advantage, at least as to the weapons, is on the side of the moderns. There are better sounding names and more variety in the instruments, works, stratagems and other artifices employed in our war system than in theirs. In short, the modern military dictionary is more copious than the ancient, and the words at least as poetical.

As to the mode of fighting, we have, poetically speaking, lost something in one respect, but we have gained much in another. Our battles indeed admit but few single combats, or trials of individual prowess. They do admit them, however; and it is not impossible to describe them with as much detail and interest as the nature of the action requires; as Voltaire has proved in the single combat of Aumale and Turenne in the Henriad. Had he managed his general descriptions and the other parts of the conduct of his poem as well, he would have made it a far more interesting work than he has. However, since our single combats must be insignificant in their consequences, not deciding any thing as to the result of the battle, it would be inconvenient and misplaced to make much use of them in our descriptions. And here lies our disadvantage, compared with the ancients.

But in a general engagement, the shock of modern armies is, beyond comparison, more magnificent, more sonorous and more discoloring to the face of nature, than the ancient could have been; it is consequently susceptible of more pomp and variety of description. Our heaven and earth are not only shaken and tormented with greater noise, but filled and suffocated with fire and smoke. If Homer, with his Grecian tongue and all its dialects, had had the battle of Blenheim to describe, the world would have possessed a picture and a piece of music which it will never possess. The description would have astonished all ages, and enriched every language into which it might have been translated.

With regard to naval battles the moderns have altogether the advantage. But there has been no naval battle described in modern poetry; neither is there any remaining to us from the ancients, except that in the bay of Marseilles by Lucan, and that near Syracuse by Silius. It would seem strange indeed that Homer, whose wonderful powers of fiction were not embarrassed by historical realities, and who in other respects is so insatiable of variety, did not introduce a sea fight either in the defence of Troy or in the disastrous voyages of Ulysses. But the want of this in Homer's two poems amounts almost to a proof that in his time the nations had not yet adopted any method of fighting at sea; so that the poet could have no such image in his mind.

The business of war, with all its varieties, makes but a small part of the subject of my poem; it ought therefore to occupy but a small portion of its scenery. This is the reason why I have not been more solicitous to vary and heighten the descriptions of battles and other military operations. I make this observation to satisfy those readers who being accustomed to see a long poem chiefly occupied with this sort of bustle conceive that the life and interest of such compositions depend upon it. How far the majesty or interest of epic song really depends upon the tumultuous conflicts of war I will not decide; but I can assure the reader, so far as my experience goes, that these parts of the work are not the most difficult to write. They are scenes that exhibit those vigorous traits of human character which strike the beholder most forcibly and leave the deepest impression. They delight in violent attitudes; and, painting themselves in the strongest colors on the poet's fancy, they are easy at any time to recal. He varies them at pleasure, he adorns them readily with incidents, and imparts them with spirit to the reader.

My object is altogether of a moral and political nature. I wish to encourage and strengthen, in the rising generation, a sense of the importance of republican institutions; as being the great foundation of public and private happiness, the necessary aliment of future and permanent meliorations in the condition of human nature.

This is the moment in America to give such a direction to poetry, painting and the other fine arts, that true and useful ideas of glory may be implanted in the minds of men here, to take place of the false and destructive ones that have degraded the species in other countries; impressions which have become so wrought into their most sacred institutions, that it is there thought impious to detect them and dangerous to root them out, tho acknowledged to be false. Wo be to the republican principle and to all the institutions it supports, when once the pernicious doctrine of the holiness of error shall creep into the creed of our schools and distort the intellect of our citizens.

The Columbiad, in its present form, is such as I shall probably leave it to its fate. Whether it be destined to survive its author, is a question that gives me no other concern than what arises from the most pure and ardent desire of doing good to my country. To my country, therefore, with every sentiment of veneration and affection, I dedicate my labors.

INTRODUCTION.

Every circumstance relating to the discovery and settlement of America is an interesting object of inquiry, especially to the great and growing nations of this hemisphere, who owe their existence to those arduous labors. Yet it is presumed that many persons, who might be entertained with a poem on this subject, are but slightly acquainted with the life and character of the hero whose extraordinary genius led him to discover the continent, and whose singular sufferings, arising from that service, ought to excite the indignation of the world.

Christopher Columbus was born in Genoa about the year 1447, when the navigation of Europe was scarcely extended beyond the limits of the Mediterranean and the other narrow seas that border the great ocean. The mariner's compass had been invented and in common use for more than a century; yet with the help of this sure guide, and prompted by a laudable spirit of discovery, the mariners of those days rarely ventured from the sight of land. They acquired wonderful applause by sailing along the coast of Africa, and discovering some of the neighboring islands; and after pushing their researches with great industry for half a century, the Portuguese, who were the most fortunate and enterprising, extended their voyages southward no further than the equator.

The rich commodities of the East had, for several ages, been brought into Europe by the Red Sea and the Mediterranean; and it had now become the object of the Portuguese to find a passage to India by sailing round the southern extremity of Africa, and then taking an eastern course. This great object engaged the general attention, and drew into the Portuguese service adventurers from the other maritime nations of Europe. Every year added to their experience in navigation, and seemed to promise some distant reward to their industry. The prospect, however, of arriving at India by that route was still by no means encouraging. Fifty years' perseverance in the same track having brought them only to the equator, it was probable that as many more would elapse before they could accomplish their purpose.

But Columbus, by an uncommon exertion of genius, formed a design no less astonishing to the age in which he lived than beneficial to posterity. This design was to sail to India by taking a western direction. By the accounts of travellers who had visited that part of Asia, it seemed almost without limits on the east; and by attending to the spherical figure of the earth, Columbus drew the natural conclusion, that the Atlantic ocean must be bounded on the west either by India itself, or by some continent not far distant from it.

This illustrious navigator, who was then about twenty-seven years of age, appears to have possessed every talent requisite to form and execute the greatest enterprises. He was early educated in such of the useful sciences as were taught in that day. He had made great proficiency in geography, astronomy and drawing, as they were necessary to his favorite pursuit of navigation. He had been a number of years in the service of the Portuguese, and had acquired all the experience that their voyages and discoveries could afford. His courage had been put to the severest test; and the exercice of every amiable as well as heroic virtue, the kindred qualities of a great mind, had secured him an extensive reputation. He had married a Portuguese lady, by whom he had two sons, Diego and

Such was the situation of Columbus, when he formed and digested a plan, which, in its operation and consequences, has unfolded to the view of mankind one half of the globe, diffused wealth and industry over the other, and is extending commerce and civilization thro the whole. To corroborate the theory he had formed of the existence of a western continent, his discerning mind, which knew the application of every circumstance that fell in his way, had observed several facts which by others would have passed unnoticed. In his voyages to the African islands he had found, floating ashore after a long western storm, pieces of wood carved in a curious manner, canes of a size unknown in that quarter of the world, and human bodies with very singular features.

The opinion being well established in his mind that a considerable portion of the earth still remained to be discovered, his temper was too vigorous and persevering to suffer an idea of this importance to rest merely in speculation, as it had done with Plato and Seneca, who seem to have entertained conjectures of a similar nature. He determined, therefore, to bring his theory to the test of experiment. But an object of that magnitude required the patronage of a prince; and a design so extraordinary met with all the obstructions that an age of superstition could invent, and personal jealousy enhance.

It is happy for mankind that, in this instance, a genius capable of devising the greatest undertakings associated in itself a degree of patience and enterprise, modesty and confidence, which rendered him superior to these misfortunes, and enabled him to meet with fortitude all the future calamities of his life. Excited by an ardent enthusiasm to become a discoverer of new countries, and fully sensible of the advantages that would result to mankind from such discoveries, he had the cruel mortification to wear away eighteen years of his life, after his system was well established in his own mind, before he could obtain the means of executing his projected voyage. The greatest part of this period was spent in successive solicitations in Genoa, Portugal and Spain.

As a duty to his native country he made his first proposal to the senate of Genoa, where it was soon rejected. Conscious of the truth of his theory, and of his own abilities to execute his plan, he retired without dejection from a body of men who were incapable of forming any just ideas upon the subject, and applied with fresh confidence to John Second, king of Portugal, who had distinguished himself as the great patron of navigation, and in whose service Columbus had acquired a reputation which entitled him and his project to general confidence. But here he experienced a treatment much more insulting than a direct refusal. After referring the examination of his scheme to the council who had the direction of naval affairs, and drawing from him his general ideas of the length of the voyage and the course he meant to take, that splendid monarch had the meanness to conspire with the council to rob Columbus of the glory and advantage he expected to derive from his undertaking. While Columbus was amused with the negotiation, in hopes of having his scheme adopted, a vessel was secretly dispatched by order of the king to make the intended discovery. Want of skill or courage in the pilot rendered the plot unsuccessful; and Columbus, on discovering the treachery, retired with an ingenuous indignation from a court which could be capable of such duplicity.

Having now performed what was due to the country that gave him birth, and to the one that had adopted him as a subject, he was at liberty to court the patronage of any other which should have the wisdom to accept his proposals. He had communicated his ideas to his brother Bartholomew, whom he sent to England to negotiate with Henry Seventh; at the same time he went himself into Spain to apply in person to Ferdinand and Isabella, who governed the united kingdoms of Arragon and Castile.

The circumstances of his brother's application in England, which appears to have been unsuccessful, are not to my purpose to relate; and the limits prescribed to this biographical sketch will prevent the detail of particulars respecting his own negotiation in Spain. This occupied him eight years; in which the various agitations of suspense, expectation and disappointment must have borne hard upon his patience. At length his scheme was adopted by Isabella; who undertook, as queen of Castile, to defray the expenses of the expedition, and declared herself ever after the friend and patron of the hero who projected it.

Columbus, who during his ill success in the negotiation never abated any thing of the honors and emoluments which he expected to acquire in the expedition, obtained from Ferdinand and Isabella a stipulation of every article contained in his first proposals. He was constituted high admiral and viceroy of all the seas, islands and continents which he should discover; with power to receive one tenth of the profits arising from their productions and commerce; which offices and emoluments were to be made hereditary in his family.

These articles being adjusted, the preparations for the voyage were brought forward with rapidity; but they were by no means adequate to the importance of the expedition. Three small vessels, scarcely sufficient in size to be employed in the coasting business, were appointed to traverse the vast Atlantic, and to encounter the storms and currents always to be expected in tropical climates, uncertain seasons and unknown seas. These vessels, as we must suppose them in the infancy of navigation, were ill constructed, in a poor condition, and manned by seamen unaccustomed to distant voyages. But the tedious length of time which Columbus had passed in solicitation and suspense, and the prospect of being able soon to obtain the object of his wishes, induced him to overlook what he could not easily remedy, and led him to disregard those circumstances which would have intimidated any other mind. He accordingly equipped his small squadron with as much expedition as possible, manned with ninety men and victualled for one year. With these, on the third of August 1492, amidst a vast crowd of spectators, he set sail on an enterprise which, if we consider the ill condition of his ships, the inexperience of his sailors, the length and precarious nature of his voyage and the consequences that flowed from it, was the most daring and important that ever was undertaken. He touched at some of the Portuguese settlements in the Canary isles; where, although he had been but a few days at sea, he found his vessels needed refitting. He soon made the necessary repairs, and took his departure from the westermost islands that had hitherto been discovered. Here he left the former track of navigation, and steered his course due west.

Not many days after he laid this course he perceived the symptoms of a new scene of difficulty. The sailors now began to contemplate the dangers and uncertain issue of a voyage, the nature and length of which were left entirely open to conjecture. Besides the fickleness and timidity natural to men unaccustomed to the discipline of a seafaring life, several circumstances contributed to inspire an obstinate and mutinous disposition, which required the most consummate art as well as fortitude in the admiral to control. Having been three weeks at sea, and experienced the uniform course of the tradewinds, they contended that, should they continue the same course for a longer time, the same winds would never permit them to return to Spain. The magnetic needle began to vary its direction. This being the first time that this phenomenon was ever noticed, it was viewed by the sailors with astonishment; they thought it an indication that nature itself had changed its laws, and that Providence was about to punish their audacity in venturing so far beyond the bounds of man. They declared that the commands of the government had been fully obeyed in their proceeding so many days in the same course, and so far surpassing all former navigators in quest of discoveries.

Every talent requisite for governing, soothing and tempering the passions of men is conspicuous in the conduct of Columbus on this occasion. The dignity and affability of his manners, his surprising knowledge and experience in naval affairs, his unwearied and minute attention to the duties of his command, gave him a great ascendency over the minds of his men, and inspired that degree of confidence which would have maintained his authority in almost any circumstances. But here, from the nature of the undertaking, every man had leisure to feed his imagination with the gloominess and uncertainty of the prospect. They found from day to day the same steady gales wafting them with rapidity from their native country, and indeed from all countries of which they had any knowledge.

He addressed himself to their passions with all the variety of management that the situation would admit, sometimes by soothing them with the prognostics of approaching land, sometimes by flattering their ambition and feasting their avarice with the glory and wealth they would acquire from discovering the rich countries beyond the Atlantic, and sometimes by threatening them with the displeasure of their king, should their disobedience defeat so great an object. But every argument soon lost its effect, and their uneasiness still increased. From secret whisperings it arose to open mutiny and dangerous conspiracy. At length they determined to rid themselves of the remonstrances of Columbus by throwing him into the sea. The infection spread from ship to ship, and involved officers as well as sailors. They finally lost all sense of subordination, and addressed their commander in an insolent manner, demanding to be conducted back to Spain; or, they assured him, they would seek their own safety by taking away his life.

Columbus, whose sagacity had discerned every symptom of the disorder, was prepared for this last stage of it, and was sufficiently apprised of the danger that awaited him. He found it vain to contend with passions he could no longer control. He therefore proposed that they should obey his orders for three days longer; and, should they not discover land in that time, he would then direct his course for Spain. They complied with his proposal; and, happily for mankind, in three days they discovered land. This was a small island, to which he gave the name of San Salvador. His first interview with the natives was a scene of compassion on the one part and astonishment on the other, but highly interesting to both. The natives were entirely naked, simple and timorous; and they viewed the Spaniards as a superior order of beings descended from the sun; which, in that island and in most parts of America, was worshipped as a deity. By this it was easy for Columbus to perceive the line of conduct proper to be observed towards that simple and inoffensive people. Had his companions and successors of the Spanish nation possessed the wisdom and humanity of this great discoverer, the benevolent mind would have had to experience no sensations of regret in contemplating the extensive advantages arising to mankind from the discovery of America.

In this voyage Columbus discovered the islands of Cuba and Hispaniola, on the latter of which he erected a small fort; and having left a garrison of thirty-eight men he set sail for Spain. Returning across the Atlantic, he was overtaken by a violent storm, which lasted several days, and increased to such a degree as baffled his naval skill and threatened immediate destruction.

In this situation, when all were in a state of despair, and it was expected that every sea would swallow up the crazy vessel, he manifested a serenity and presence of mind seldom equalled in cases of like extremity. He wrote a short account of his voyage and of the discoveries he had made; this he hastily wrapped in an oiled cloth, then enclosed it in a cake of wax and put it into an empty cask, which he threw overboard, in hopes that some fortunate accident might preserve a deposit of so much importance to the world.

The storm however abated, and he at length arrived in Spain, after having been driven by stress of weather into the port of Lisbon; where he had opportunity, in an interview with the king of Portugal, to prove the truth of his system by arguments more convincing than those he had before advanced in the character of a bold projector but humble suitor. He was received every where in Spain with royal honors; his family was ennobled, and his former stipulation respecting his offices and emoluments was ratified in the most solemn manner by Ferdinand and Isabella; while all Europe resounded his praises, and reciprocated their joy and congratulations on the discovery of what they called a new world.

The immediate consequence was a second voyage, in which Columbus took charge of a squadron of seventeen ships of considerable burden. Volunteers of all ranks solicited to be employed in this expedition. He carried over fifteen hundred persons, with the necessaries for establishing a colony and extending his discoveries. In this voyage he explored most of the West India islands; but on his arrival at Hispaniola he found that the garrison he had left there had been all destroyed by the natives, and the fort demolished. He proceeded, however, in the planting of his colony; and, by his prudent and humane conduct toward the natives, he effectually established the Spanish authority in that island. But while he was thus laying the foundation of European dominion in America, some discontented persons, who had returned to Spain, uniting with his former opponents and powerful enemies at court, conspired to accomplish his ruin.

They represented his conduct in such a light as to create uneasiness in the jealous mind of Ferdinand, and make it necessary for Columbus again to return to Spain, to counteract their machinations and obtain such further supplies as were necessary to his great political and beneficent purposes. On his arriving at court, and stating with his usual dignity and confidence the whole history of his transactions abroad, every thing wore a favorable appearance. He was received with the same honors as before, and solicited to take charge of another squadron, to carry out supplies, to pursue his discoveries, and in every respect to use his discretion in extending the Spanish empire in the new world.

In this third voyage he discovered the continent of America at the mouth of the river Orinoco. He rectified many disorders in his government of Hispaniola, which had happened in his absence; and every thing was going on in a prosperous train, when an event was announced to him, which completed his own ruin and gave a fatal turn to the Spanish policy and conduct in America. This was the arrival of Francis de Bovadilla, with a commission to supersede Columbus in his goverment, to arraign him as a criminal, and pronounce judgment on all his former administration.

It seems that by this time the enemies of Columbus, despairing to complete his overthrow by groundless insinuations of maleconduct, had taken the more effectual method of exciting the jealousy of their sovereigns. From the promising samples of gold and other valuable commodities brought from America, they took occasion to represent to the king and queen that the prodigious wealth and extent of the countries he had discovered would soon throw such power into the hands of the viceroy, that he would trample on the royal authority and bid defiance to the Spanish power. These arguments were well calculated for the cold and suspicious temper of Ferdinand, and they must have had some effect upon the mind of Isabella. The consequence was the appointment of Bovadilla, the inveterate enemy of Columbus, to take the government from his hands. This first tyrant of the Spanish nation in America began his administration by ordering Columbus to be put in chains on board of a ship, and sending him prisoner to Spain. By relaxing all discipline he introduced disorder and licentiousness thro the colony. He subjected the unhappy natives to a most miserable servitude, and apportioned them out in large numbers among his adherents. Under this severe treatment perished in a short time many thousands of those innocent people.

Columbus was carried in his fetters to the Spanish court, where the king and queen either feigned or felt a sufficient regret at the conduct of Bovadilla towards their illustrious prisoner. He was not only released from confinement; he was treated with all imaginable respect. But, altho the king endeavored to expiate the offence by censuring and recalling Bovadilla, yet we may judge of his sincerity from his appointing Nicholas de Ovando, another well known enemy of Columbus, to succeed in the government; and from his ever after refusing to reinstate Columbus, or to fulfil any of the conditions on which the discoveries had been undertaken.

After two years of solicitation for this or some other employment, he at length obtained a squadron of four small vessels to attempt new discoveries. He then set out, with the enthusiasm of a young adventurer, in quest of what was always his favorite object, a passage into the South Sea, by which he might sail to India. He touched at Hispaniola, where Ovando the governor refused him admittance on shore, even to take shelter during a hurricane, the prognostics of which his experience had taught him to discern. By putting into a creek he rode out the storm, and then bore away for the continent. He spent several months, the most boisterous of the year, in exploring the coast round the gulf of Mexico, in hopes of finding the intended navigation to India. At length he was shipwrecked and driven ashore on the island of Jamaica.

His cup of calamities seemed now to be full. He was cast upon an island of savages, without provisions, without a vessel, and thirty leagues from any Spanish settlement. But the greatest physical misfortunes are capable of being imbittered by the insults of our fellow creatures. A few of his companions generously offered, in two Indian canoes, to attempt a voyage to Hispaniola, in hopes of obtaining a vessel for the relief of the unhappy crew. After suffering every extremity of danger and fatigue, they arrived at the Spanish colony in ten days. Ovando, excited by personal malice against Columbus, detained these messengers eight months, and then despatched a vessel to Jamaica to spy out the condition of Columbus and his crew, with positive instructions to the captain not to afford them any relief. This order was punctually executed. The captain approached the shore, delivered a letter of empty compliment from Ovando to the admiral, received his answer and returned. About four months afterwards a vessel came to their relief; and Columbus, worn out with fatigues and broken by misfortunes, returned for the last time to Spain. Here a new distress awaited him, which he considered as one of the greatest of his whole life: this was the death of queen Isabella, his last and most powerful friend.

He did not suddenly abandon himself to despair. He called upon the gratitude and justice of the king; and in terms of dignity demanded the fulfilment of his former contract. Notwithstanding his age and infirmities, he even solicited to be further employed in extending the career of discovery, without a prospect of any other reward than the pleasure of doing good to mankind. But Ferdinand, cold, ungrateful and timid, dared not comply with any proposal of this kind, lest he should increase his own obligations to a man whose services he thought it dangerous to reward. He therefore delayed and avoided any decision on these subjects, in hopes that the declining health of Columbus would soon rid the court of the remonstrances of a suitor, whose unexampled merit was, in their opinion, a sufficient reason for destroying him. In this they were not disappointed. Columbus languished a short time, and gladly resigned a life which had been worn out in the most signal services, perhaps, that have been rendered by any one man to an ungrateful world.

Posterity is sometimes more just to the memory of great men than cotemporaries were to their persons. But even this consolation, if it is one, has been wanting to the discoverer of our hemisphere. The continent, instead of bearing his name, has been called after one of his followers, a man of no particular merit. And in the modern city of Mexico there is instituted and perpetuated, by order of government, an annual festival in honor of Hernando Cortez, the perfidious butcher of its ancient race; while no public honors have been decreed to Christopher Columbus, one of the wisest and best among the benefactors of mankind.

After his last return from America he seems to have passed the short remainder of his life at Valladolid, the capital of Old Castile, and then the seat of the Spanish government. He died in that city on the twentieth of August 1506, and was buried in one of its churches. Over his body is a plain stone inscribed simply with his name, as it is written in Spanish, Christoval Colon.

His son, who wrote his life, has left us a particular description of his person, manners and private character; all of which were agreeable and interesting. His portrait is in possession of the author of this poem. It is painted in oil, half length and the size of life, copied from an original in the gallery of Florence.

I SING the Mariner who first unfurl'd
An eastern banner o'er the western world,
And taught mankind where future empires lay
In these fair confines of descending day;
Who sway'd a moment, with vicarious power,
Iberia's sceptre on the new found shore,
Then saw the paths his virtuous steps had trod
Pursued by avarice and defiled with blood,
The tribes he foster'd with paternal toil
Snatcht from his hand, and slaughter'd for their spoil.
Slaves, kings, adventurers, envious of his name,
Enjoy'd his labors and purloin'd his fame,

And gave the Viceroy, from his high seat hurl'd,
Chains for a crown, a prison for a world.
Long overwhelm'd in woes, and sickening there,
He met the slow still march of black despair,
Sought the last refuge from his hopeless doom,
And wisht from thankless men a peaceful tomb:
Till vision'd ages, opening on his eyes,
Cheer'd his sad soul and bade new nations rise;
He saw the Atlantic heaven with light o'ercast,
And freedom crown his glorious work at last.
Almighty Freedom! give my venturous song
The force, the charm that to thy voice belong;
Tis thine to shape my course, to light my way,
To nerve my country with the patriot lay,
To teach all men where all their interest lies,
How rulers may be just and nations wise:
Strong in thy strength I bend no suppliant knee,
Invoke no miracle, no Muse but thee.
Night held on old Castile her silent reign,
Her half orb'd moon declining to the main;
O'er Valladolid's regal turrets hazed
The drizzly fogs from dull Pisuerga raised;

Whose hovering sheets, along the welkin driven,
Thinn'd the pale stars, and shut the eye from heaven.
Cold-hearted Ferdinand his pillow prest,
Nor dream'd of those his mandates robb'd of rest,
Of him who gemm'd his crown, who stretcht his reign
To realms that weigh'd the tenfold poise of Spain;
Who now beneath his tower indungeon'd fares,
Sweats the chill sod and breathes infected airs.

His feverish pulse, slow laboring thro his frame,
Feeds with scant force its fast expiring flame;
A far dim watch-lamp's thrice reflected beam
Throws thro his grate a mist-encumber'd gleam,
Paints the dun vapors that the cell invade,
And fills with spectred forms the midnight shade;
When from a visionary short repose,
That nursed new cares and temper'd keener woes,
Columbus woke, and to the walls addrest,
The deep felt sorrows bursting from his breast.

Here lies the purchase, here the wretched spoil
Of painful years and persevering toil.
For these damp caves, this hideous haunt of pain,
I traced new regions o'er the chartless main,

Tamed all the dangers of untraversed waves,
Hung o'er their clefts, and topt their surging graves.
Saw traitorous seas o'er coral ridges sweep,
Red thunders rock the pole and scorch the deep,
Death rear his front in every varying form,
Gape from the shoals and ride the roaring storm.
My struggling bark her seamy planks disjoin,
Rake the rude rock and drink the copious brine.
Till the tired elements are lull'd at last,
And milder suns allay the billowing blast,
Lead on the trade winds with unvarying force,
And long and landless curve our constant course.
Our homeward heaven recoils; each night forlorn
Calls up new stars, and backward rolls the morn;
The boreal vault descends with Europe's shore,
And bright Calisto shuns the wave no more;
The Dragon dips his fiery-foaming jole,
The affrighted magnet flies the faithless pole;
Nature portends a general change of laws,
My daring deeds are deemed the guilty cause;
The desperate crew, to insurrection driven,
Devote their captain to the wrath of heaven,

Resolve at once to end the audacious strife,
And buy their safety with his forfeit life.
  In that sad hour, this feeble frame to save,
(Unblest reprieve) and rob the gaping wave,
The morn broke forth, these tearful orbs descried
The golden banks that bound the western tide.
With full success I calm'd the clamorous race,
Bade heaven's blue arch a second earth embrace;
And gave the astonisht age that bounteous shore,
Their wealth to nations, and to kings their power.
  Land of delights! ah dear delusive coast,
To these fond aged eyes for ever lost!
No more thy flowery vales I travel o'er,
For me thy mountains rear the head no more,
For me thy rocks no sparkling gems unfold,
Nor streams luxuriant wear their paths in gold;
From realms of promised peace for ever borne,
I hail mute anguish, and in secret mourn.
  But dangers past, a world explored in vain,
And foes triumphant speak but half my pain.
Dissembling friends, each early joy who gave,
And fired my youth the storms of fate to brave,

Swarm'd in the sunshine of my happier days,
Pursued the fortune and partook the praise,
Now pass my cell with smiles of cold disdain,
Insult my woes and triumph in my pain.
One gentle guardian once could shield the brave;
But now that guardian slumbers in the grave. (1)
Hear from above, thou dear departed shade!
As then my hopes, so now my sorrows aid,
Burst my full heart, afford that last relief,
Breathe back my sighs and reinspire my grief;
Still in my sight thy royal form appears,
Reproves my silence and demands my tears.
Even on that hour no more I joy to dwell,
When thy protection bade the canvas swell,
When kings and churchmen found their factions vain,
When superstition shrunk beneath her chain,
The sun's glad beam led on the circling way,
And isles rose beauteous in Atlantic day.
For on those silvery shores, that new domain,
What crowds of tyrants fix their murderous reign!
Her infant realm indignant Freedom flies,
Truth leaves the world and Isabella dies.

Ah lend thy friendly shroud to veil my sight,
That these pain'd eyes may dread no more the light;
These welcome shades shall close my instant doom,
And this drear mansion moulder to a tomb.
Thus mourn'd the hapless man: a thundering sound
Roll'd thro the shuddering walls and shook the ground;
O'er all the dungeon, where black arches bend,
The roofs unfold and streams of light descend;
The growing splendor fills the astonisht room,
And gales etherial breathe a glad perfume.
Robed in the radiance, moves a form serene,
Of human structure but of heavenly mien;
Near to the prisoner's couch he takes his stand
And waves, in sign of peace, his holy hand.
Tall rose his stature, youth's endearing grace
Adorn'd his limbs and brighten'd in his face;
Loose o'er his locks the star of evening hung,
And sounds melodious moved his cheerful tongue:
Rise, trembling chief, to scenes of rapture rise,
This voice awaits thee from the western skies;
Indulge no longer that desponding strain,
Nor count thy toils nor deem thy virtues vain.

Thou seest in me the guardian Power who keeps
The new found world that skirts Atlantic deeps;
Hesper my name, my seat the brightest throne
In night's whole heaven, my sire the living sun.
My brother Atlas, from his birthright boast,
Claims the wild wave, but mine the solid coast.

Atlas and Hesper were of the race of Titans. They were sons of Uranus or of Japetus, according as the fable is traced to different countries, whose supreme god (originally the sun) was called by different names. Atlas, from being king of Mauritania, became a mountain to support the heavens, and gave his name to the western ocean. Hesper frequented that mountain in the study of astronomy; till one evening he disappeared, and returned no more. He was then placed in the western heaven; and, having been a beautiful young man, he became a beautiful planet, called the evening star. This circumstance gave his name to the western regions of the earth indefinitely. Italy was called Hesperia by the Greeks, because it lay west from them, and seemed under the influence of the star of evening; Spain was called Hesperia by the Romans, for the same reason.

If the nations which adopted this fable had known of a country west of the Atlantic, that country must have been Hesperia to them all; and pursuing this analogy I have so named it in several instances in the course of the poem. Considering Hesper as the guardian genius, and Columbus as the discoverer of the western continent, it may derive its name, in poetical language, from either of theirs indifferently, and be called Hesperia or Columbia.

Atlas is considered in this poem as the guardian genius of Africa. See his speech in the eighth book, on the slavery of his people.

This hand, which form'd, and in the tides of time
Laves and improves the meliorating clime,
Which taught thy prow to cleave the trackless way,
And hail'd thee first in occidental day,
To all thy worth shall vindicate thy claim,
And raise up nations to revere thy name.
In this dark age tho blinded faction sways,
And wealth and conquest gain the palm of praise;
Awed into slaves while groveling millions groan,
And blood-stain'd steps lead upward to a throne;
Far other wreaths thy virtuous temples twine,
Far nobler triumphs crown a life like thine;
Thine be the joys that minds immortal grace,
As thine the deeds that bless a kindred race.
Now raise thy sorrow'd soul to views more bright,
The vision'd ages rushing on thy sight;
Worlds beyond worlds shall bring to light their stores,
Time, nature, science blend their utmost powers,

This explanation seemed of such immediate importance for understanding the machinery of the poem, as to require its being placed here. The other notes, being numerous and some of them long, are placed at the end of the volume, with suitable reference to the passages to which they belong.

To show, concentred in one blaze of fame,
The ungather'd glories that await thy name.
  As that great seer, whose animating rod
Taught Jacob's sons their wonder-working God,
Led far thro dreary wastes the murmuring band,
And reacht the confines of their promised land,
Forbid to enter, but from Pisgah's height,
On fruitful Canaan feasted long his sight;
View'd unborn nations from his labors blest,
Forgot his toils and sooth'd his soul to rest;
Thus o'er thy subject wave shalt thou behold
Far happier realms their future charms unfold,
In nobler pomp another Pisgah rise,
Beneath whose foot thy new found Canaan lies;
There, rapt in vision, hail my favorite clime
And taste the blessings of remotest time.
  So Hesper spoke; Columbus raised his head;
His chains dropt off; the cave, the castle fled.
Forth walkt the Pair; when steep before them stood,
A radiant track, a heaven-illumined road,
That thro disparting shades arose on high,
Reacht o'er the hills and lengthen'd up the sky,

Show'd a clear summit, rich with rising flowers,
That breathe their odors thro celestial bowers.
O'er the proud Pyrenees it looks sublime,
Subjects the Alps and levels Europe's clime;
Spain, lessening to a chart, beneath it swims,
And shrouds her dungeons in the void she dims.
Led by the Power, the Hero gain'd the height,
New strength and brilliance flusht his mortal sight;
When calm before them flow'd the western main,
Far stretcht, immense, a sky-encircled plain.
No sail, no isle, no cloud invests the bound,
Nor billowy surge disturbs the vast profound;
Till, deep in distant heavens, the sun's blue ray
Topt unknown cliffs and call'd them up to day;
Slow glimmering into sight wide regions drew,
And rose and brighten'd on the expanding view;
Fair sweep the waves, the lessening ocean smiles,
In misty radiance loom a thousand isles;
Near and more near the long drawn coasts arise,
Bays stretch their arms and mountains lift the skies,
The lakes unfolding point the streams their way,
Slopes, ridges, plains their spreading skirts display,

The vales branch forth, high walk approaching groves,
And all the majesty of nature moves.
O'er the wild hemisphere his glances fly,
Its form distending as it still draws nigh,
As all its salient sides force far their sway,
Crowd back the ocean and indent the day.
He saw, thro central zones, the winding shore
Spread the deep gulf his sail had traced before,
The Darien isthmus check the raging tide,
Join distant lands and neighboring seas divide;
On either hand the shores unbounded bend,
Push wide their waves, to each dim pole ascend;
The two twin continents diverging rise,
Broad as the main and lengthen'd with the skies.
Long gazed the Mariner; when thus the Guide:
Here spreads the world thy daring sail descried,
Hesperia call'd, from my anterior claim;
But now Columbia, from thy patriarch name.
So from Phenicia's peopled strand of yore
Europa sail'd and sought an unknown shore;
There stampt her sacred name; and thence her race,
Hale, venturous, bold from Jove's divine embrace.

Ranged o'er the world, predestined to bestride
Earth's elder continents and each far tide.
Ages unborn shall bless the happier day,
That saw thy streamer shape the guideless way,
Their bravest heroes trace the path you led
And sires of nations thro the regions spread.
Behold yon isles, where first thy flag unfurl'd
In bloodless triumph o'er the younger world;
As, awed to silence, savage bands gave place,
And hail'd with joy the sun-descended race. (2)
Retrace the banks yon rushing waters lave;
There Orinoco checks great ocean's wave;
Thine is the stream; it cleaves the well known coast,
Where Paria's walks thy former footsteps boast.
But these no more thy wide discoveries bound,
Superior prospects lead their swelling round,
Nature's remotest scenes before thee roll,
And years and empires open on thy soul.
With yon bold eminence commence thy view;
See Quito's plains o'erlook their pround Peru,
On whose huge base, like islands built in heaven,
A vast protuberance forms the gates of even.

Approaching slow they still expand their bounds,
The yielding concave bends sublimer rounds;
Whose wearied stars high curving to the west,
Pause on the summits for a moment's rest;
Recumbent there they renovate their force
And roll rejoicing on their downward course.

Another mass invades yon southern skies,
Hills form on hills and peaks o'er peaks arise,
Ascending, whitening, rocks and crags are lost,
O'erhung with headcliffs of eternal frost!
Broad fields of ice give back the morning ray,
Like walls of suns or heaven's perennial day.

There folding storms on eastern pinions ride,
Veil the black void and wrap the mountain's side,
Rude thunders rake the crags, the rains decend
And the long lightnings o'er the vallies bend;
While blasts unburden'd sweep the cliffs of snow,
The whirlwinds wheel above, the floods convolve below.

There molten rocks explosive rend their tomb;
Volcanos, laboring many a nation's doom,
Wild o'er the regions pour their floods of fire;
The shores heave backward and the seas retire.

There lava waits my late reluctant call,
To roar aloft and shake some guilty wall;
Thy pride, O Lima, swells the sulphurous wave,
And fanes and priests and idols crowd thy grave.
But cease, my son, these dread events to trace,
Nor learn the woes that here await thy race.
Anorth from that broad gulf, where verdant rise
Those gentler mounds that skirt the temperate skies,
A happier hemisphere invites thy view;
The ancient world shall there embrace the new;
There Europe's better sons their seat shall trace
And change of government improve the race.
Thro all the midsky zones, to yon blue pole,
Their green hills lengthen, their bright rivers roll;
And swelling westward, how their champaigns run!
How slope their uplands to the morning sun!
So spoke the blest Immortal; when more near
His northern wilds in all their breadth appear;
Lands yet unknown and streams without a name
Rise into vision and demand their fame.
As when a saint first gains his bright abode,
Vaults o'er the spheres and views the works of God,

Sees earth, his kindred orb, beneath him roll,
Here glow the centre, and there point the pole;
O'er land and sea his eyes delighted rove,
And human thoughts his heavenly joys improve;
With equal scope the raptured Hero's sight
Ranged the low vale or climb'd the cloudy height,
As, fixt in ardent look, his opening mind
Explored the realms that here invite mankind.
From sultry Mobile's gulf-indented shore
To where Ontario hears his Laurence roar,
Stretcht o'er the broadbackt hills in long array,
The tenfold Alleganies meet the day,
And show, far sloping from the plains and streams,
The forest azure streakt with orient beams.
High moved the scene, Columbus gazed sublime,
And thus in prospect hail'd the happy clime:
Blest be the race my guardian guide shall lead
To these wide vales with every bounty spread.
What treasured stores the hills must here combine!
Sleep still ye diamonds, and ye ores refine;
Exalt your heads ye oaks, ye pines ascend,
Till future navies bid your branches bend;

Then spread the canvas o'er the watery way,
Explore new worlds and teach the old your sway.
He said, and northward cast his curious eyes
On other cliffs of more exalted size.
Where Maine's bleak breakers line the dangerous coast,
And isles and shoals their latent horrors boast,
High lantern'd in his heaven the cloudless White
Gives the glad sailor an eternal light; (3)
Who far thro troubled ocean greets the guide,
And stems with steadier helm the stormful tide.
Nor could those heights unnoticed raise their head,
That swell sublime o'er Hudson's shadowy bed;
Tho fiction ne'er has hung them in the skies,
Tho White and Andes far superior rise,
Yet hoary Kaatskill, where the storms divide,
Would lift the heavens from Atlas' laboring pride.
Land after land his passing notice claim,
And hills and mountains rise without a name,
All yet unsung, their mystic powers untold;
Celestials there no sacred senates hold;
No chain'd Prometheus feeds the vulture there,
No Cyclop forges thro their summits glare,

To Phrygian Jove no victim smoke is curl'd,
Nor ark high landing quits a deluged world.
But were these masses piled on Asia's shore,
Taurus would shrink, Hemodia boast no more,
Indus and Ganges scorn their humble sires,
And rising suns salute superior fires;
Whose watchful priest would greet with matin blaze
His earlier god, and sooner chaunt his praise.
For here great nature with a bolder hand
Roll'd the broad stream and heaved the lifted land;
And here, from finisht earth, triumphant trod
The last ascending steps of her creating God.

He saw these mountains ope their watery stores,
Floods quit their caves and seek the distant shores;
Wild thro disparting plains their waves expand
And lave the banks where future towns must stand.
Whirl'd from the monstrous Andes' bursting sides,
Maragnon (4) leads his congregating tides;
A thousand Alps for him dissolve their snow,
A thousand Rhones obedient bend below;
From different zones their ways converging wind,
Sweep beds of ore and leave their gold behind,

In headlong cataracts indignant rave,
Rush to his banks and swell the swallowing wave.
Ucayla, first of all his mighty sons,
From Cusco's walls a wearied journey runs;
Pastaza mines proud Pambamarca's base,
And holds thro sundering hills his lawless race;
Aloft, where Cotopaxi flames on high,
The roaring Napo quits his misty sky,
Down the long steeps in whitening torrents driven,
Like Nile descending from his fabled heaven;
Mound after mound impetuous Tigris rends,
Curved Ista folds whole countries in his bends,
Vast Orinoco, summon'd forth to bring
His far fetcht honors to the sateless king,
Drives on his own strong course to gain the shore,
But sends Catuba here with half his store;
Like a broad Bosphorus here Negro guides
The gather'd mass of fifty furious tides;
From his waste world, by nameless fountains fed,
Wild Purus wears his long and lonely bed;
O'er twelve degrees of earth Madera flows,
And robs the south of half its treasured snows;

Zingus, of equal length and heavier force,
Rolls on, for months, the same continuous course
To reach his master's bank, that here constrains
Topayo, charged with all Brazilla's rains;
While inland seas and lakes unknown to fame
Send their full tributes to the monarch stream;
Who, swell'd with growing conquest, wheels abroad,
Drains every land and gathers all his flood,
Then far from clime to clime majestic goes,
Enlarging, widening, deepening as he flows;
Like heaven's broad milkyway he shines alone,
Spreads o'er the globe its equatorial zone,
Weighs the cleft continent and pushes wide
Its balanced mountains from each crumbling side.
Sire Ocean hears his proud Maragnon roar,
Moves up his bed and seeks in vain the shore,
Then surging strong, with high and hoary tide,
Whelms back the Stream and checks his rolling pride.
The Stream ungovernable foams with ire,
Climbs, combs tempestuous, and attacks the Sire;
Earth feels the conflict; onward still it spreads,
Her isles and uplands hide their weedy heads;

League after league from land to water change,
From realm to realm the seaborn monsters range;
Vast midland heights but pierce the liquid plain,
Old Andes tremble for their proud domain;
Till the fresh Flood regains his forceful sway,
Drives back his father Ocean lasht with spray
Whose ebbing waters lead the downward sweep,
And waves and trees and banks roll whirling to the deep.
Where suns less ardent cast their golden beams,
And minor Andes pour a waste of streams,
The marsh of Moxoe scoops the world, and fills
(From Bahia's coast to Cochabamba's hills)
A thousand leagues of bog; he strives in vain
Their floods to centre and their lakes retain;
His gulfs o'ercharged their opening sides display,
And southern vales prolong the seaward way.
Columbus traced, with swift exploring eye,
The immense of waves that here exalted lie,
The realms that mound the unmeasured magazine,
The far blue main, the climes that stretch between.
He saw Xaraya's diamond banks unfold,
And Paraguay's deep channel paved (5) with gold,

Saw proud Potosi lift his glittering head
And pour down Plata thro his tinctured bed.
Rich with the spoils of many a distant mine,
In his broad silver sea their floods combine;
Wide over earth his annual freshet strays
And her long months of gradual waste repays;
Her thirsty regions wait his glad return
And drink their future harvest from his urn.

Where the cold circles gird the southern sky,
Brave Magellan's wild channel caught his eye;
The long cleft ridges wall'd the spreading way,
That gleams far westward to an unknown sea.
Soon as the distant swell was seen to roll,
His ancient wishes (6) reabsorb'd his soul;
Warm from his heaving heart a sudden sigh
Burst thro his lips; he turn'd his moisten'd eye
And thus besought his Angel: speak, my guide,
Where leads the pass, and what yon purple tide?
How the dim waves in blending ether stray!
No lands behind them rise, no pinions on them play.

There spreads, belike, that other unsail'd main
I sought so long, and sought alas in vain,

To gird this watery globe, and bring to light
Old India's coast and regions wrapt in night.
Restore, celestial friend, my youthful morn,
Call back my years and let my fame return;
Grant me to trace, beyond that pathless sea,
Some happier shore from lust of empire free,
To find in that far world a peaceful bower,
From envy safe and curst Ovando's power.
Earth's happiest realms let not their distance hide,
Nor seas forever roll their useless tide.
For nations yet unborn, that wait thy time,
Demand their seats in that secluded clime;
Ah grant me still, their passage to prepare,
One venturous bark, and be my life thy care.
So pray'd the Hero; Hesper mild replies,
Divine compassion softening in his eyes:
Tho still to virtuous deeds thy mind aspires,
And these glad visions kindle new desires,
Yet hear with reverence what attends thy state,
Nor wish to pass the eternal bounds of fate.
Led by this sacred light thou soon shalt see
That half mankind shall owe their home to thee;

Freedom's first empire claim its promised birth
In these rich rounds of sea-encircled earth;
Let other years, by thine example prest,
Call forth their heroes to explore the rest.
  Thro different seas a twofold passage lies
To where sweet India scents a waste of skies.
The circling course, by Madagascar's shores,
Round Afric's cape, bold Gama now explores;
Thy well plann'd path these gleamy straits provide,
Nor long shall rest the daring search untried.
This idle frith must open soon to fame,
Here a lost Lusitanian (7) fix his name,
From that new main in furious waves be tost
And fall neglected on the barbarous coast.
  But lo the chief! bright Albion bids him rise,
Speed in his pinions, ardor in his eyes;
Hither, O Drake, display thy hastening sails,
Widen ye passes, and awake ye gales,
March thou before him, courteous king of day,
Wind his long course, illume his pathless way;
Earth's distant shores, in circling bands unite,
Lands, learn your fame, and oceans, roll in light.

Round all the watery globe his flag be hurl'd,
A new Columbus to the astonisht world.
He spoke; and silent tow'rd the northern sky
Wide o'er the hills the Hero cast his eye,
Saw the long floods thro devious channels pour
And wind their currents to the opening shore;
Interior seas and lonely lakes display
Their glittering glories to the beams of day.
Thy capes, Virginia, towering from the tide,
Raise their blue banks and slope thy barriers wide,
To future sails unfold an inland way
And guard secure thy multifluvian bay,
That drains uncounted realms and here unites
The liquid mass from Alleganian heights.
York leads his wave, imbankt in flowery pride,
And nobler James falls winding by his side;
Back to the hills, thro many a silent vale,
Wild Rappahanoc seems to lure the sail,
Patapsco's bosom courts the hand to toil,
Dull Susquehanna laves a length of soil;
But mightier far, in sealike azure spread,
Patomac sweeps his earth disparting bed.

Long dwelt his eye where these commingling pour'd,
Their waves unkeel'd, their haven's unexplored;
Where frowning forests stretch the dusky wing,
And deadly damps forbid the flowers to spring;
No seasons clothed the field with cultured grain,
No buoyant ship attempts the chartless main;
Then, with impatient voice, My Seer, he cried,
When shall my children cross the lonely tide?
Here, here my sons, the hand of culture bring,
Here teach the lawn to smile, the grove to sing;
Ye laboring floods, no longer vainly glide,
Ye harvests load them, and ye forests ride;
Bear the deep burden from the joyous swain,
And tell the world where peace and plenty reign.
Hesper, to this returning no reply,
Presents new visions to his roving eye.
He saw broad Delaware the shores divide,
He saw majestic Hudson pour his tide;
Thy stream, my Hartford, thro its misty robe,
Play'd in the sunbeams, belting far the globe;
No watery glades thro richer vallies shine,
Nor drinks the sea a lovelier wave than thine.

Mystic and Charles refresh their seaward isles,
And gay Piscateway pays his passing smiles;
Swift Kenebec, high bursting from his lakes,
Shoots down the hillsides thro the clouds he makes;
And hoarse resounding, gulfing wide the shore,
Dread Laurence labors with tremendous roar;
Laurence, great son of Ocean! lorn he lies
And braves the blasts of hyperborean skies.
Where hoary winter holds his howling reign
And April flings her timid showers in vain,
Groans the choked Flood, in frozen fetters bound,
And isles of ice his angry front surround.
As old Enceladus, in durance vile,
Spreads his huge length beneath Sicilia's isle,
Her mass of mountains, on his body prest,
Close not his veins nor still his laboring breast;
His limbs convulse, his heart rebellious rolls,
Earth shakes responsive to her utmost poles,
While rumbling, bursting boils his ceaseless ire,
Flames to mid heaven and sets the skies on fire.
So the contristed Laurence lays him low,
And hills of sleet and continents of snow

Rise on his crystal breast; his heaving sides
Crash with the weight, and pour their gushing tides.
Asouth, whence all his hundred branches bend,
Relenting airs with boreal blasts contend;
Far in his vast extremes he swells and thaws,
And seas foam wide between his ice-bound jaws.
Indignant Frost, to hold his captive, plies
His hosted fiends that vext the polar skies,
Unlocks his magazines of nitric stores,
Azotic charms and muriatic powers;
Hail, with its glassy globes, and brume congeal'd,
Rime's fleecy flakes, and storm that heaps the field,
Strike thro the sullen Stream with numbing force,
Obstruct his sluices and impede his course.
In vain he strives; his might interior fails;
Nor spring's approach, nor earth's whole heat avails;
He calls his hoary sire; old Ocean roars
Responsive echo thro the Shetland shores.
He comes, the Father! from his bleak domains,
To break with liquid arms the sounding chains;
Clothed in white majesty, he leads from far
His tides high foaming to the wintry war.

Billows on billows lift the maddening brine,
And seas and clouds in battling conflict join,
O'erturn the vast gulf glade with rending sweep,
And crash the crust that bridged the boiling deep;
Till forced aloft, bright bounding thro the air,
Moves the blear ice and sheds a dazzling glare;
The torn foundations on the surface ride,
And wrecks of winter load the downward tide.
  The loosen'd ice isles o'er the main advance,
Toss on the surge and thro the concave dance;
Whirl'd high, conjoin'd, in crystal mountains driven,
Alp over Alp, they build a midway heaven;
Whose million mirrors mock the solar ray
And give condensed the tenfold glare of day.
As tow'rd the south the mass enormous glides
And brineless rivers furrow down its sides,
The thirsty sailor steals a glad supply,
And sultry tradewinds quaff the boreal sky.
  But oft insidious death, with mist o'erstrown,
Rides the dark ocean on this icy throne;
When ships thro vernal seas with light airs steer
Their midnight march and deem no danger near.

The steerman gaily helms his course along
And laughs and listens to the watchman's song,
Who walks the deck, enjoys the murky fog,
Sure of his chart, his magnet and his log,
Their shipmates dreaming, while their slumbers last,
Of joys to come, of toils and dangers past.
Sudden a chilling blast comes roaring thro
The trembling shrouds and startles all the crew;
They spring to quarters and perceive too late
The mount of death, the giant strides of fate.
The fullsail'd ship, with instantaneous shock
Dasht into fragments by the floating rock,
Plunges beneath its basement thro the wave,
And crew and cargo glut the watery grave.
  Say, Palfrey, (8) brave good man, was this thy doom?
Dwells here the secret of thy midsea tomb?
But, Susan, why that tear? my lovely friend,
Regret may last, but grief should have an end.
An infant then, thy memory scarce can trace
The lines, tho sacred, of thy father's face;
A generous spouse has well replaced the sire;
New duties hence new sentiments require.

Now where the lakes, those midland oceans, lie
Columbus turn'd his heaven-illumined eye.
Ontario's banks, unable to retain
The five great Caspians from the distant main,
Burst with the ponderous mass, and forceful whirl'd
His Laurence forth, to balance thus the world.
Above, bold Erie's wave sublimely stood,
Lookt o'er the cliff and heaved his headlong flood;
Where dread Niagara bluffs high his brow
And frowns defiance to the world below.
White clouds of mist expanding o'er him play,
That tinge their skirts in all the beams of day;
Pleased Iris wantons in perpetual pride
And bends her rainbows o'er the dashing tide.
Far glimmering in the north, Black Huron runs,
Clear Michigan reflects a thousand suns,
And bason'd high, on earth's broad bosom gay,
The bright Superior silvers down the day.
Blue mounds beyond them far in either fade,
Deep groves between them cast a solemn shade,
Slow moves their settling mist in lurid streams
And dusky radiance streaks the solar beams.

Fixt on the view the great discoverer stood
And thus addrest the messenger of good:
But why these seats, that seem reserved to grace
The social toils of some illustrious race?
Why spread so wide and form'd so fair in vain?
And why so distant rolls the bounteous main?
These happy regions must forever rest
Of man unseen, by native beasts possest;
And the best heritage my sons could boast
Illude their search in far dim deserts lost.
For see, no ship can point her pendants here,
No stream conducts nor ocean wanders near;
Frost, crags and cataracts their north invest,
And the tired sun scarce finds their bounds awest.
To whom the Seraph: Here indeed retires
The happiest land that feels my fostering fires;
Here too shall numerous nations found their seat,
And peace and freedom bless the kind retreat.
Led by this arm thy sons shall hither come,
And streams obedient yield the heroes room,
Spread a broad passage to their well known main,
Nor sluice their lakes nor form their soils in vain.

Here my bold Missisippi bends his way,
Scorns the dim bounds of yon bleak boreal day
And calls from western heavens, to feed his stream,
The rains and floods that Asian seas might claim.
Strong in his march and charged with all the fates
Of regions pregnant with a hundred states,
He holds in balance, ranged on either hand,
Two distant oceans and their sundering land,
Commands and drains the interior tracts that lie
Outmeasuring Europe's total breadth of sky.
High in the north his parent fountains wed,
And oozing urns adorn his infant head;
In vain proud Frost his nursing lakes would close
And choke his channel with perennial snows;
From all their slopes he curves his countless rills,
Sweeps their long marshes, saps their settling hills;
Then stretching, straitening south, he gaily gleams,
Swells thro the climes and swallows all their streams;
From zone to zone, o'er earth's broad surface curl'd,
He cleaves his course, he furrows half the world,
Now roaring wild thro bursting mountains driven,
Now calm reflecting all the host of heaven;

Where Cynthia pausing, her own face admires,
And suns and stars repeat their dancing fires.
Wide o'er his meadowy lawns he spreads and feeds
His realms of canes, his waving world of reeds;
Where mammoths grazed the renovating groves,
Slaked their huge thirst and chill'd their fruitless loves;
Where elks, rejoicing o'er the extinguisht race,
By myriads rise to fill the vacant space.
Earth's widest gulf expands to meet his wave,
Vast isles of ocean in his current lave;
Glad Thetis greets him from his finisht course
And bathes her Nereids in his freshening source.
To his broad bed their tributary stores
Wisconsin here, there lonely Peter pours;
Croix, from the northeast wilds, his channel fills,
Ohio, gather'd from his myriad hills,
Yazoo and Black, surcharged by Georgian springs,
Rich Illinois his copious treasure brings;
Arkansa, measuring back the sun's long course,
Moine, Francis, Rouge augment the father's force.
But chief of all his family of floods
Missouri marches thro his world of woods;

He scorns to mingle with the filial train,
Takes every course to reach alone the main;
Orient awhile his bending sweep he tries,
Now drains the southern, now the northern skies,
Searches and sunders far the globe's vast frame,
Reluctant joins the sire and takes at last his name.

There lies the path thy future sons shall trace,
Plant here their arts and rear their vigorous race:
A race predestined, in these choice abodes,
To teach mankind to tame their fluvial floods,
Retain from ocean, as their work requires,
These great auxiliars, raised by solar fires,
Force them to form ten thousand roads, and girth
With liquid belts each verdant mound of earth,
To aid the colon's as the carrier's toil,
To drive the coulter and to fat the soil,
Learn all mechanic arts and oft regain
Their native hills in vapor and in rain.

So taught the Saint. The regions nearer drew
And raised resplendent to their Hero's view
Rich nature's triple reign; for here elate
She stored the noblest treasures of her state,

Adorn'd exuberant this her last domain,
As yet unalter'd by her mimic man,
Sow'd liveliest gems and plants of proudest grace,
And strung with strongest nerves her animated race.
Retiring far round Hudson's frozen bay,
Earth's lessening circles shrink beyond the day;
Snows ever rising with the toils of time
Choke the chill shrubs that brave the dismal clime;
The beasts all whitening (9) roam the lifeless plain,
And caves unfrequent scoop the couch for man.
Where spring's coy steps in cold Canadia stray,
And joyless seasons hold unequal sway,
He saw the pine its daring mantle rear,
Break the rude blast, and mock the brumal year,
Shag the green zone that bounds the boreal skies,
And bid all southern vegetation rise.
Wild o'er the vast impenetrable round
The untrod bowers of shadowy nature frown'd;
Millennial cedars wave their honors wide,
The fir's tall boughs, the oak's umbrageous pride,
The branching beach, the aspin's trembling shade
Veil the dim heaven and brown the dusky glade.

For in dense crowds these sturdy sons of earth
In frosty regions claim a stronger birth;
Where heavy beams the sheltering dome requires
And copious trunks to feed its wintry fires.
But warmer suns, that southern zones emblaze,
A cool thin umbrage o'er their woodland raise;
Floridia's shores their blooms around him spread,
And Georgian hills erect their shady head;
Whose flowery shrubs regale the passing air
With all the untasted fragrance of the year.
Beneath tall trees, dispersed in loose array,
The rice-grown lawns their humble garb display;
The infant maiz, unconscious of its worth,
Points the green spire and bends the foliage forth;
In various forms unbidden harvests rise,
And blooming life repays the genial skies.
Where Mexic hills the breezy gulf defend,
Spontaneous groves with richer burdens bend.
Anâna's stalk its shaggy honors yields,
Acacia's flowers perfume a thousand fields,
Their cluster'd dates the mast-like palms unfold,
The spreading orange waves a load of gold,

Connubial vines o'ertop the larch they climb,
The long-lived olive mocks the moth of time,
Pomona's pride, that old Grenada claims,
Here smiles and reddens in diviner flames;
Pimento, citron scent the sky serene,
White woolly clusters fringe the cotton's green,
The sturdy fig, the frail deciduous cane
And foodful cocoa fan the sultry plain.
  Here, in one view, the same glad branches bring
The fruits of autumn and the flowers of spring;
No wintry blasts the unchanging year deform,
Nor beasts unshelter'd fear the pinching storm;
But vernal breezes o'er the blossoms rove
And breathe the ripen'd juices thro the grove.
  Beneath the crystal wave's inconstant light,
Pearls burst their shells to greet the Hero's sight;
From opening earth in living lustre shine
The various treasures of the blazing mine;
Hills, cleft before him, all their stores unfold,
The pale platina and the burning gold;
Silver whole mounds, and gems of dazzling ray
Illume the rocks and shed the beams of day.

THE

COLUMBIAD.

BOOK II.

ARGUMENT.

Natives of America appear in vision. Their manners and characters. Columbus demands the cause of the dissimilarity of men in different countries. Hesper replies, That the human body is composed of a due proportion of the elements suited to the place of its first formation; that these elements, differently proportioned, produce all the changes of health, sickness, growth and decay, and may likewise produce any other changes which occasion the diversity of men; that these elemental proportions are varied, not more by climate than temperature and other local circumstances; that the mind is likewise in a state of change, and will take its physical character from the body and from external objects: examples. Inquiry concerning the first peopling of America. View of Mexico. Its destruction by Cortez. View of Cusco and Quito, cities of Peru. Tradition of Capac and Oella, founders of the Peruvian empire. Columbus inquires into their real history. Hesper gives an account of their origin and relates the stratagems they used in establishing that empire.

COLUMBIAD.

BOOK II.

HIGH o'er his world as thus Columbus gazed
And Hesper still the changing scene emblazed,
Round all the realms increasing lustre flew
And raised new wonders to the Patriarch's view.
He saw at once, as far as eye could rove,
Like scattering herds, the swarthy people move
In tribes innumerable; all the waste,
Wide as their walks, a varying shadow cast.
As airy shapes, beneath the moon's pale eye,
People the clouds that sail the midnight sky,
Dance thro the grove and flit along the glade
And cast their grisly phantoms on the shade,

So move the hordes in thickets half conceal'd
Or vagrant stalking thro the fenceless field.
Here tribes untamed, who scorn to fix their home,
O'er shadowy streams and trackless deserts roam;
While others there in settled hamlets rest,
And corn-clad vales a happier state attest.
Crowds of war painted chiefs, athirst for gore,
Beat their own breasts and tone their hideous roar;
From hill to hill the startling war song flies
And tribes on tribes in dread disorder rise,
Track the mute foe and scour the howling wood
Loud as a storm, ungovern'd as a flood;
Or deep in groves the silent ambush lay,
Lead the false flight, decoy and seize their prey,
Their captives torture, butcher for their food,
Suck the warm veins and grime their cheeks with blood.
In doubt he stood and question'd thus the seer,
What class of nature's sons behold we here?
Their human frames with brutal souls combine,
No power can tame them and no arts refine;
Can these be fashion'd on the social plan,
Or boast a lineage with the race of man?

When found in that my first discover'd isle,
They used no force, and seem'd to know no guile.
A timorous herd like harmless roes they ran
And call'd us gods, from whom their tribes began.
But when, their fears allay'd, in us they trace
Men of this earth, a social mortal race,
When Spanish blood their eyes with joy beheld,
A frantic rage their changing bosoms swell'd;
They roused their bands from numerous hills afar
To feast their souls on ruin, waste and war;
Nor plighted vows nor sure defeat control
The same indignant savageness of soul.

Tell then, my seer, from what dire sons of earth
The brutal people drew their ancient birth;
If these forgotten shores and useless tides
Have form'd them different from the world besides,
Born to subjection, when in happier time
A nobler race should reach their fruitful clime;
Or if a common source all nations claim,
Their lineage, form and faculties the same,
What sovereign secret cause, yet undisplay'd,
This wondrous change in nature's work has made;

Why various powers of soul and tints of face
In different lands diversify the race.
To whom the Guide: Unnumber'd causes lie
In earth and sea, in climate, soil and sky,
That fire the soul or damp the genial flame
And work their wonders on the human frame.
See beauty, form and color change with place;
Here charms of health the lively visage grace,
There pale diseases float in every wind,
Deform the figure and degrade the mind.
From earth's own elements thy race at first
Rose into life, the children of the dust;
These kindred elements, by various use,
Nourish the growth and every change produce,
In each ascending stage the man sustain,
His breath, his food, his physic and his bane.
In due proportions where these atoms lie,
A certain form their equal aids supply;
And while unchanged the efficient causes reign,
Age following age the certain form maintain.
But where crude atoms disproportion'd rise
And cast their sickening vapors round the skies,

Unlike that harmony of human frame,
That molded first and reproduced the same,
The tribes ill form'd, attempering to the clime,
Still vary downward with the years of time;
More perfect some and some less perfect yield
Their reproductions in this wondrous field;
Till fixt at last their characters abide
And local likeness feeds their local pride.
The soul too, varying with the change of clime,
Feeble or fierce, or groveling or sublime,
Forms with the body to a kindred plan
And lives the same, a nation or a man.

Yet think not clime alone the tint controls,
On every shore, by altitude of poles;
A different cast the glowing zone demands,
In Paria's groves, from Tombut's (10) burning sands.
Unheeded agents, for the sense too fine,
With every pulse, with every thought combine,
Thro air and ocean with their changes run,
Breathe from the ground or circle with the sun.
Where these long continents their shores outspread,
See the same form all different tribes pervade.

Thro all alike the fertile forests bloom,
And all, uncultured, shed a solemn gloom;
Thro all, great nature's boldest features rise,
Sink into vales or tower amid the skies;
Streams darkly winding stretch a broader sway,
The groves and mountains bolder walks display;
A dread sublimity informs the whole,
And rears a dread sublimity of soul.
Yet time and art shall other changes find,
And open still and vary still the mind.
The countless clans that tread these dank abodes,
Who glean spontaneous fruits and range the woods,
Fixt here for ages in their swarthy face
Display the wild complexion of the place.
Yet when the hordes to happy nations rise
And earth by culture warms (11) the genial skies,
A fairer tint and more majestic grace
Shall flush their features and exalt the race;
While milder arts, with social joys refined,
Inspire new beauties in the growing mind.
Thy followers too, old Europe's noblest pride,
When future gales shall wing them o'er the tide,

A ruddier hue and deeper shade shall gain
And stalk in statelier figures (12) on the plain.
While nature's grandeur lifts the eye abroad
O'er these last labors of the forming God,
Wing'd on a wider glance the venturous soul
Bids greater powers and bolder thoughts unrol;
The sage, the chief, the patriot unconfined
Shield the weak world and meliorate mankind.

But think not thou, in all the range of man,
That different pairs each different cast began;
Or tribes distinct, by signal marks confest,
Were born to serve or subjugate the rest.

The Hero heard and thus resumed the strain:
Who led these wanderers o'er the dreary main?
Could their weak sires unskill'd in human lore
Build the bold bark to seek an unknown shore?
A shore so distant from the world beside,
So dark the tempests and so wild the tide,
That Greece and Tyre and all who tempt the sea
Have shunn'd the task and left the fame to me.

When first thy roving race, the Power replied,
Learn'd by the stars the devious sail to guide,

From stormy Hellespont explored the way
And sought the limits of the Midland sea,
Before Alcides form'd his impious plan
To check the sail and bound the steps of man,
This hand had led them to this rich abode
And braved the wrath of that strong demigod.
Driven from the Calpian strait, the hapless train
Roll'd on the waves that sweep the western main;
Storms from the orient blacken'd heaven with shade,
Nor sun nor stars could yield their wonted aid.
For many a darksome day o'erwhelm'd and tost,
Their sails, their oars in swallowing surges lost,
At length, the clouds withdrawn, they sad descry
Their course directing from their native sky.
No hope remains; far onward o'er the zone,
The tradewind bears them with the circling sun;
Till wreckt and stranded here, the sylvan coast
Receives to lonely seats the suffering host.
The fruitful vales invite their steps to roam
Renounce their sorrows and forget their home;
Revolving years their ceaseless wanderings led,
And from their sons descending nations spread.

These in the torrid tracts began their sway,
Whose cultured fields their growing arts display.
The northern tribes a later stock may boast,
A race descended from the Asian coast.
High in the arctic, where Anadir glides,
A narrow strait the impinging worlds divides;
There Tartar fugitives from famine sail,
And migrant tribes these fruitful shorelands hail.

He spoke; when Behren's pass before them lay,
And moving nations on the margin stray
Thick swarming, venturous; sail and oar they ply
Climb on the surge and o'er the billows fly.
As when autumnal storms awake their force
The storks foreboding tempt their southern course,
From all the fields collecting throngs arise,
Mount on the wing and crowd along the skies;
Thus, to his eye, from bleak Tartaria's shore,
Thro isles and seas the gathering people pour,
Change their cold regions for a happier strand,
Leap from the wave and tread the welcome land,
In growing tribes extend their southern sway
And wander wide beneath a warmer day.

But why, the Chief replied, if ages past
Led the bold vagrants to so mild a waste,
If human souls for social compact given
Imprest their nature with the stamp of heaven,
Why the wild woods forever must they rove,
Nor arts nor social joys their passions move?
Long is the lapse of ages, since thy hand
Conducted here thy first adventurous band.
On other shores, in every eastern clime,
Since that unletter'd, distant tract of time,
What arts have sprung, imperial powers to grace!
What sceptres sway'd the many-master'd race!
Guilt, grandeur, glory from their seats been hurl'd
And dire divulsions shook the changing world!
Ere Rome's first Eagle clave the frighted air,
Ere Sparta form'd her deathlike sons of war,
Ere Tyre and Ilion saw their towers arise,
Or Memphian pyramids usurpt the skies,
These tribes have forester'd the fruitful zone,
Their seats unsettled and their name unknown.
Hesper to this replied: A scanty train
In that far age approacht the wide domain;

The wide domain with game and fruitage crown'd
Supplied their food uncultured from the ground.
By nature form'd to rove, the human kind,
Of freedom fond, will ramble unconfined,
Till all the region fills, and rival right
Restrains their steps and bids their force unite;
When common safety builds a common cause,
Conforms their interest and inspires their laws,
By mutual checks their different manners blend,
Their fields bloom joyous and their walls ascend.
Here to the vagrant tribes no bounds arose,
They form'd no union as they fear'd no foes;
Wandering and wild, from sire to son they stray
A thousand ages, scorning every sway.
And what a world their seatless tribes embraced!
A total hemisphere's extended waste;
See the lands lengthen, see the rivers roll
To each blue main, each far dissunder'd pole!
But lo, at last the destined course is run,
The realms are peopled and their arts begun.
Where yon mid region elevated lies,
A few famed cities glitter to the skies;

There move in eastern pomp the toils of state
And temples heave magnificently great.
  The Hero turn'd to greet the novel sight,
When three far splendors, yet confusedly bright,
Rose like a constellation; till more near,
Distinctly markt their different sites appear;
Diverging still, beneath their roofs of gold,
Three cities gay their mural towers unfold.
So, led by visions of his guiding God,
The seer of Patmos o'er the welkin trod,
Saw the new heaven its flamy cope unbend
And walls and gates and spiry domes descend;
His well known sacred city grows and gains
Her new built towers, her renovated fanes;
With golden skies and suns and rainbows crow'd
Jerusalem looks forth and lights the world around
  Bright on the north imperial Mexic rose,
A mimic morn her sparkling vanes disclose,
Her opening streets concentred hues display,
Give back the sun and shed internal day;
The circling wall with guardian turrets frown'd
And lookt defiance on the realms around;

A glimmering lake without the wall retires,
Inverts the towers and seems a grove of spires.
Proud o'er the midst, on columns lifted high,
A giant structure claims a loftier sky;
O'er the tall gates sublimer arches bend,
Courts larger lengthen, bolder walks ascend,
Starr'd with superior gems the porches shine
And speak the royal residence within.
There, deckt in state robes on his golden throne
Mid suppliant kings, dread Montezuma shone;
Mild in his eye a temper'd grandeur sate,
High seem'd his soul, with conscious power elate;
In aspect open, social and serene,
Inclosed by favorites and of friends unseen.
Round the rich throne, in various lustre dight,
Gems undistinguisht cast a changing light;
Sapphire and emerald soften down the scene,
Cold azure mingling with the vernal green,
Pearl, amber, ruby warmer flames unfold
And diamonds brighten from the burning gold;
Thro all the dome the living blazes blend
And shoot their rainbows where the arches bend.

On every ceiling, painted light and gay,
Symbolic forms their graphic art display,
Recording, confident of endless fame,
Each feat of arms, each patriarchal name,
Like Memphian hieroglyphs, (13) to stretch the span
Of memory frail in momentary man.

Pour'd thro the gates a hundred nations greet,
Throng the rich mart and line each ample street,
Ply different labors, walls and structures rear
Or till the fields or train the ranks of war.
Thro spreading states the skirts of empire bend,
New temples rise and other plains extend;
Thrice ten wide provinces, in culture gay,
Bless the same king and daily firm the sway.

A smile benignant kindling in his eyes,
Oh happy realm! the glad Columbus cries;
Far in the midland, safe from every foe,
Thy arts shall flourish as thy virtues grow,
To endless years thy rising fame extend
And sires of nations from thy sons descend.
May no gold-thirsty race thy temples tread,
Insult thy rites nor heap thy plains with dead;

No Bovadilla seize the tempting spoil,
No dark Ovando, no religious (14) Boyle,
In mimic priesthood grave or robed in state,
O'erwhelm thy glories in oblivious fate!
Vain are thy hopes, the sainted Power replied,
These rich abodes from Spanish hordes to hide,
Or teach hard guilt and cruelty to spare
The guardless prize of sacrilegious war.
Think not the vulture mid the field of slain,
Where base and brave promiscuous strow the plain,
Where the young hero in the pride of charms
Pours brighter crimson o'er his spotless arms,
Will pass the tempting prey and glut his rage
On harder flesh and carnage black with age;
O'er all alike he darts his eager eye,
Whets the blunt beak and hovers down the sky,
From countless corses picks the dainty food
And screams and fattens in the purest blood:
So the vile hosts, that hither trace thy way,
On happiest tribes with fiercest fury prey.
Thine the dread task, O Cortez, here to show
What unknown crimes can heighten human woe,

On these fair fields the blood of realms to pour,
Tread sceptres down and print thy steps in gore,
With gold and carnage swell thy sateless mind
And live and die the blackest of mankind.
He gains the shore. Behold his fortress rise,
His fleet high flaming (15) suffocates the skies.
The march begins; the nations in affright
Quake as he moves and wage the fruitless fight;
Thro the rich provinces he bends his way,
Kings in his chain and kingdoms for his prey,
Full on the imperial town infuriate falls
And pours destruction o'er its batter'd walls.
In quest of peace great Montezuma stands,
A sovereign supplicant with lifted hands,
Brings all his treasure, yields the regal sway,
Bids vassal millions their new lord obey,
And plies the victor with incessant prayer,
Thro ravaged realms the harmless race to spare.
But treasures, tears and sceptres plead in vain,
Nor threats can move him nor a world restrain;
While blind religion's prostituted name
And monkish fury guide the sacred flame.

O'er crowded fanes their fires unhallow'd bend,
Climb the wide roofs, the lofty towers ascend,
Pour thro the lowering skies the smoky flood
And stain the fields and quench the blaze in blood.
  Columbus heard; and with a heaving sigh
Dropt the full tear that started in his eye:
Oh hapless day! his trembling voice replied,
That saw my wandering pennon mount the tide.
Had but the lamp of heaven to that bold sail
Ne'er markt the passage nor awoke the gale,
Taught foreign prows these peopled shores to find
Nor led those tigers forth to fang mankind;
Then had the tribes beneath these bounteous skies
Seen their walls widen and their harvests rise,
Down the long tracts of time their glory shone,
Broad as the day and lasting as the sun;
The growing realms, behind thy shield that rest,
Paternal monarch, still thy power had blest,
Enjoy'd the pleasures that surround thy throne,
Survey'd thy virtues and improved their own.
  Forgive me prince, this luckless arm hath led
The storm unseen that hovers o'er thy head;

Taught the dark sons of slaughter where to roam,
To seize thy crown and seal the nation's doom.
Arm, sleeping empire, meet the murderous band,
Drive back the invaders, save the sinking land—
But vain the call! behold the streaming blood!
Forgive me nature, and forgive me God.

While sorrows thus his patriarch pride control,
Hesper reproving sooths his tender soul:
Father of this new world, thy tears give o'er,
Let virtue grieve and heaven be blamed no more.
Enough for man, with persevering mind,
To act his part and strive to bless his kind;
Enough for thee o'er thy dark age to soar
And raise to light that long-secluded shore.
For this my guardian care thy youth inspired,
To virtue rear'd thee and with glory fired,
Bade in thy plan each distant world unite
And wing'd thy vessel for the venturous flight.

Nor think the labors vain; to good they tend;
Tyrants like these shall ne'er defeat their end;
Their end that opens far beyond the scope
Of man's past efforts and his present hope.

Long has thy race, to narrow shores confined,
Trod the same round that fetter'd fast the mind;
Now borne on bolder plumes, with happier flight,
The world's broad bounds unfolding to the sight,
The mind shall soar; the coming age expand
Their arts and lore to every barbarous land;
And buried gold, drawn copious from the mine,
Give wings to commerce and the world refine.

Now to yon southern cities turn thy view
And mark the rival seats of rich Peru.
See Quito's airy plains, exalted high,
With loftier temples rise along the sky;
And elder Cusco's shining roofs unfold,
Flame on the day and shed their suns of gold.
Another range, in these pacific climes,
Spreads a broad theatre for unborn crimes;
Another Cortez shall their treasures view,
His rage rekindle and his guilt renew;
His treason, fraud and every fell design,
O curst Pizarro, shall revive in thine.

Here reigns a prince, whose heritage proclaims
A long bright lineage of imperial names;

Where the brave roll of Incas love to trace
The distant father of their realm and race,
Immortal Capac. He in youthful pride,
With young Oella his illustrious bride,
Announced their birth divine; a race begun
From heaven, the children of their god the Sun;
By him sent forth a polisht state to frame,
Crush the fiend gods that human victims claim,
With cheerful rites their pure devotions pay
To the bright orb (16) that gives the changing day.
On this great plan, as children of the skies,
They plied their arts and saw their hamlets rise.
First of their works, and sacred to their fame,
Yon proud metropolis received its name,
Cusco the seat of states, in peace design'd
To reach o'er earth and civilize mankind.
Succeeding sovereigns spread their limits far,
Tamed every tribe and sooth'd the rage of war;
Till Quito bow'd; and all the heliac zone
Felt the same sceptre and confirm'd the throne.
Near Cusco's wall, where still their hallow'd isle
Bathes in its lake and wears its verdant smile,

Where these prime parents of the sceptred line
Their advent made and spoke their birth divine,
Behold their temple stand; its glittering spires
Light the glad waves and aid their father's fires.
Archt in the walls of gold, its portal gleams
With various gems of intermingling beams;
And flaming from the front, with borrow'd ray,
A diamond circlet gives the rival day,
In whose bright face forever looks abroad
The labor'd image of the radiant God.
There dwells the royal priest, whose inner shrine
Conceals his lore; tis there his voice divine
Proclaims the laws; and there a cloister'd quire
Of holy virgins keep the sacred fire.
  Columbus heard; and curious to be taught
What pious fraud such wondrous changes wrought,
Askt by what mystic charm, in that dark age,
They quell'd in savage souls the barbarous rage,
By leagues of peace combined a wide domain
And taught the virtues in their laws to reign.
  Long is the tale; but tho their labors rest
By years obscured, (17) in flowery fiction drest,

My voice, said Hesper, shall revive their name
And give their merits to immortal fame.
Led by his father's wars, in early prime
Young Capac left his native northern clime;
The clime where Quito since hath rear'd her fanes,
And now no more her barbarous rites maintains.
He saw these vales in richer blooms array'd
And tribes more numerous haunt the woodland shade,
Saw rival clans their local gods adore,
Their altars staining with their children's gore,
Yet markt their reverence for the Sun, whose beam
Proclaims his bounties and his power supreme;
Who sails in happier skies, diffusing good,
Demands no victim and receives no blood.
  In peace return'd with his victorious sire,
New charms of glory all his soul inspire;
To conquer nations on a different plan
And build his greatness on the good of man.
  By nature form'd for hardiest deeds of fame,
Tall, bold and full proportion'd rose his frame;
Strong moved his limbs; a mild majestic grace
Beam'd from his eyes and open'd in his face;

O'er the dark world his mind superior shone
And seem'd the semblance of his parent Sun.
But tho fame's airy visions lift his eyes,
And future empires from his labors rise,
Yet softer fires his daring views control
And mixt emotions fill his changing soul.
Shall genius rare that might the world improve
Bend to the milder voice of careless love
That bounds his glories and forbids to part
From bowers that woo'd his fluctuating heart?
Or shall the toils, imperial heroes claim,
Fire his brave bosom with a patriot flame,
Bid sceptres wait him on Peruvia's shore,
And loved Oella meet his eyes no more?
  Still unresolved he sought the lonely maid
Who plied her labors in the silvan shade:
Her locks loose rolling mantle deep her breast
And wave luxuriant round her slender waist;
Gay wreaths of flowers her pensive brows adorn
And her white raiment mocks the light of morn;
Her busy hand sustains a bending bough
Where cotton clusters spread their robes of snow,

From opening pods unbinds the fleecy store
And culls her labors for the evening bower.
  For she, the first in all Hesperia, fed
The turning spindle with the twisting thread;
The woof, the shuttle follow'd her command,
Till various garments grew beneath her hand.
And now, while all her thoughts with Capac rove
Thro former scenes of innocence and love,
In distant fight his fancied dangers share
Or wait him glorious from the finisht war;
Blest with the ardent hope, her sprightly mind
A vesture white had for the prince design'd;
And here she seeks the wool to web the fleece,
The sacred emblem of returning peace.
  Sudden his near approach the maid alarms;
He flew enraptured to her yielding arms
And lost, dissolving in a softer flame,
His distant empire and the fire of fame.
At length, retiring thro the homeward field,
Their glowing souls to cooler converse yield;
O'er various scenes of blissful life they ran,
When thus the warrior to the maid began:

Long have we markt the inauspicious reign
That waits our sceptre in this rough domain;
A soil ungrateful and a wayward race,
Their game but scanty and confined their space.
Where late my steps the southern war pursued,
The fertile plains grew boundless as I view'd;
More numerous nations trod the grassy wild
And joyous nature more delightful smiled.
No changing seasons there the flowers deform,
No dread volcano and no mountain storm;
Rains ne'er invade nor livid lightnings play
Nor clouds obscure the radiant king of day.
But while his orb, in ceaseless glory bright,
Rolls the rich day and fires his stars by night,
Unbounded fulness flows beneath his reign,
Seas yield their treasures, fruits adorn the plain;
His melting mountains spread their annual flood,
Night sheds her dews, the day-breeze fans the god.
Tis he inspires me with the vast design
To form those nations to a sway divine;
Destroy the rights of every demon Power,
Whose altars smoke with sacrilegious gore;

To laws and labor teach the tribes to yield
And richer fruits to grace the cultured field.
But great, my charmer, is the task of fame
Their faith to fashion and their lives to tame;
Full many a spacious wild these eyes must see
Spread dreary bounds between my love and me;
And yon bright godhead circle thrice the year,
Each lonely evening number'd with a tear.
Long robes of white (18) my shoulders must embrace,
To speak my lineage of etherial race;
That simple men may reverence and obey
The radiant offspring of the Power of day.
When these my deeds the faith of nations gain,
And happy millions bless thy Capac's reign,
Then shall he feign a journey to the Sun,
To bring the partner of his well earn'd throne;
So shall descending kings the line sustain,
Till earth's whole regions join the vast domain.
Will then my fair, at my returning hour,
Forsake these wilds and hail a happier bower?
Will she consenting now resume her smiles,
Send forth her warrior to his glorious toils,

And, sweetly patient, wait the flight of days
That crown our labors with immortal praise?
  Silent the damsel heard; her moistening eye
Spoke the full soul nor could her voice reply,
Till softer accents sooth'd her wounded ear,
Composed her tumult and allay'd her fear.
Think not, heroic maid, my steps would part
While silent sorrows heave that tender heart.
Oella's peace more dear shall prove to me
Than all the realms that bound the raging sea;
Nor thou, bright Sun, shalt bribe my soul to rest
And leave one struggle in her lovely breast.
  Yet think in tribes so vast, my gentle fair,
What millions merit our instructive care;
How age to age leads on their joyless gloom,
Habitual slaughter their poor piteous doom.
No social ties their wayward passions prove,
Nor peace nor pleasure treads the howling grove;
Mid thousand heroes and a thousand fair
No fond Oella meets her Capac there.
Yet, taught by thee domestic joys to prize,
With softer charms the virgin race shall rise,

Awake new virtues, every grace improve
And form their minds for happiness and love.
  Ah think, as future years thro time descend,
What wide creations on thy voice depend;
And, like the Sun whose all-delighting ray
To those mild regions gives his purest day,
Diffuse thy bounties, let me instant fly;
In three short moons the generous task I'll try,
Then swift returning, I'll conduct my fair
Where realms submissive wait her fostering care.
  And will my prince, my Capac, borne away
Thro those dark wilds in quest of empire stray,
Where tigers fierce command the shuddering wood
And men like tigers thirst for human blood?
Thinkst thou no dangerous deed the course attends,
Alone, unaided by thy sire and friends?
Even chains and death may meet my hero there
Nor his last groan could reach Oella's ear.
  But no! nor death nor chains shall Capac prove
Unknown to her, while she has power to rove.
Close by thy side, where'er thy wanderings stray,
My equal steps shall measure all the way;

With borrow'd soul each chance of fate I'll dare,
Thy toils to lessen and thy dangers share.
Quick shall my ready hand two garments weave,
Whose sunny whiteness shall the tribes deceive;
Thus clad, their homage shall secure our sway
And hail us children of the god of day.
The lovely counsel pleased. The smiling chief
Approved her courage and dispell'd her grief;
Then to their homely bower in haste they move,
Begin their labors and prepare to rove.
Soon grow the robes beneath her forming care
And the fond parents wed the wondrous pair;
But whelm'd in grief beheld the following dawn,
Their joys all vanisht and their children gone.
Nine days they marcht; the tenth effulgent morn
Saw their white forms that sacred isle adorn.
The work begins; they preach to every band
The well form'd fiction and their faith demand;
With various miracles their powers display,
To prove their lineage and confirm their sway.
They train to different arts the hand of toil,
To whirl the spindle and to spade the soil,

The Sun's bright march with pious finger trace
And his pale sister with her changing face;
Show how their bounties clothe the labor'd plain,
The green maiz shooting from its golden grain,
How the white cotton tree's expanding lobes
File into threads and swell to fleecy robes;
While the tamed llama aids the wondrous plan
And lends his garment to the loins of man.

The astonisht tribes believe, with glad surprise,
The gods descended from the favoring skies,
Adore their persons robed in shining white,
Receive their laws and leave each horrid rite,
Build with assisting hands the golden throne
And hail and bless the sceptre (19) of the Sun.

THE

COLUMBIAD.

BOOK III.

NOW twenty years these children of the skies
Beheld their gradual growing empire rise.
They ruled with rigid but with generous care,
Diffused their arts and sooth'd the rage of war,
Bade yon tall temple (20) grace their favorite isle,
The mines unfold, the cultured vallies smile,
Those broad foundations bend their arches high
And rear imperial Cusco to the sky;
Wealth, wisdom, force consolidate the reign
From the rude Andes to the western main.
  But frequent inroads from the savage bands
Lead fire and slaughter o'er the labor'd lands;

They sack the temples, the gay fields deface
And vow destruction to the Incan race.
The king, undaunted in defensive war,
Repels their hordes and speeds their flight afar.
Stung with defeat, they range a wider wood
And rouse fresh tribes for future fields of blood.

Where yon blue ridges hang their cliffs on high
And suns infulminate the stormful sky,
The nations, temper'd to the turbid air,
Breathe deadly strife and sigh for battle's blare;
Tis here they meditate, with one vast blow,
To crush the race that rules the plains below.
Capac with caution views the dark design,
Learns from all points what hostile myriads join,
And seeks in time by proffer'd leagues to gain
A bloodless victory and enlarge his reign.

His eldest hope, young Rocha, at his call,
Resigns his charge (21) within the temple wall;
In whom began, with reverend forms of awe,
The functions grave of priesthood and of law.

In early youth, ere yet the ripening sun
Had three short lustres o'er his childhood run,

The prince had learnt, beneath his father's hand,
The well framed code that sway'd the sacred land;
With rites mysterious served the Power divine,
Prepared the altar and adorn'd the shrine,
Responsive hail'd with still returning praise
Each circling season that the god displays,
Sooth'd with funereal hymns the parting dead,
At nuptial feasts the joyful chorus led;
While evening incense and the morning song
Rose from his hand or trembled on his tongue.

Thus form'd for empire ere he gain'd the sway,
To rule with reverence and with power obey,
Reflect the glories of the parent Sun
And shine the Capac of his future throne
Employ'd his docile years; till now from far
The rumor'd leagues proclaim approaching war;
Matured for active scenes he quits the shrine,
To aid in council or in arms to shine.

Amid the chieftains that the court compose,
In modest mien the stripling pontiff rose,
With reverence bow'd, conspicuous o'er the rest,
Approacht the throne and thus the sire addrest:

Great king of nations, heaven-descended sage,
Thy second heir has reacht the destined age
To take these priestly robes; to his pure hand
I yield them pure and wait thy kind command.
Should foes invade, permit this arm to share
The toils, the triumphs, every chance of war;
For this dread conflict all our force demands,
In one wide field to whelm the brutal bands,
Pour to the mountain gods their wonted food
And save thy realms from future leagues of blood.
Yet oh, may sovereign mercy first ordain
Propounded compact to the savage train.
I'll go with terms of peace to spread thy sway
And teach the blessings of the god of day.
The sire return'd: My great desire you know,
To shield from slaughter and preserve the foe,
In bands of concord all their tribes to bind
And live the friend and guardian of mankind.
Should strife begin, thy youthful arm shall share
The toils of glory thro the walks of war;
But o'er their hills to seek alone the foes,
To gain their confidence or brave their blows,

Bend their proud souls to reason's voice divine,
Claims hardier limbs and riper years than thine.
Yet one of heavenly race the task requires,
Whose mystic rites control the solar fires;
So the sooth'd godhead proves to faithless eyes
His love to man, his empire of the skies.

Some veteran chief, in those rough labors tried,
Shall aid thee on and go thy faithful guide,
O'er dreary heights thy sinking limbs sustain,
Teach the dark wiles of each insidious train,
Thro all extremes of life thy voice attend,
In counsel lead thee or in arms defend.
And three firm youths, thy chosen friends, shall go
To learn the climes and meditate the foe;
That wars of future years their skill may find,
To serve the realm and save the savage kind.

Rise then, my son, first partner of my fame,
With early toils to build thy sacred name;
In high behest, for his own legate known,
Proclaim the bounties of our sire the sun,
Tell how his fruits beneath our culture rise,
His stars, how glorious, gem our cloudless skies;

And how to us his hand hath kindly given
His peaceful laws, the purest grace of heaven,
With power to widen his terrestrial sway
And give our blessings where he gives the day.
Yet, should the stubborn nations still prepare
The shaft of slaughter for the barbarous war,
Tell them we know to tread the crimson plain,
And god's own children never yield to man.
But ah, my child, with steps of caution go,
The ways are hideous and enraged the foe;
Blood stains their altars, all their feasts are blood,
Death their delight and darkness reigns their god;
Tigers and vultures, storms and earthquakes share
Their rites of worship and their spoils of war.
Shouldst thou, my Rocha, tempt too far their ire,
Should those dear relics feed a murderous fire,
Deep sighs would rend thy wretched mother's breast,
The pale Sun sink in clouds of darkness drest,
Thy sire and mournful nations rue the day
That drew thy steps from these sad walls away.
Yet go; tis virtue calls, and realms unknown,
Won by these works, may bless thy future throne;

Millions of unborn souls in time may see
Their doom reversed and owe their peace to thee;
Deluded sires with murdering hands no more
Feed fancied demons with their children's gore,
But, sway'd by happier sceptres, here behold
The rites of freedom and the shrines of gold.
Be wise, be mindful of thy realm and throne;
God speed thy labors and preserve my son!

Soon the glad prince, in robes of white array'd,
Call'd his attendants and the sire obey'd;
A diamond broad, in burning gold imprest,
Display'd the sun's bright image on his breast;
A pearl-dropt girdle bound his waist below,
And the white lautu (22) graced his lofty brow.
They journey'd forth, o'ermarching far the mound
That flankt the kingdom on its Andean bound;
Ridge after ridge thro vagrant hordes they past,
Where each new tribe seem'd wilder than the last;
To all they preach and prove the solar sway
And climb fresh mountains on their tedious way.

At length, as thro disparting clouds they rise,
And hills above them still obstruct the skies,

While a dead calm o'er all the region stood
And not a leaf could fan its parent wood,
Sudden a strange portentous noise began;
The birds fled wild, the beasts for shelter ran;
Slow, sullen, loud, with deep astounding blare,
Swell the strong tones of subterranean war;
Behind, before, beneath them groans the ground,
Earth heaves and labors with the shuddering sound;
Columns of smoke, that cap the rumbling height,
Roll reddening far thro heaven and choke the light;
From tottering steeps descend their cliffs of snow,
The mountains reel, the vallies rend below;
The headlong streams forget their usual round
And shrink and vanish in the gaping ground.
The sun descends; but night recals in vain
Her silent shades, to recommence her reign;
The bursting mount gapes high, a sudden glare
Coruscates wide, till all the purpling air
Breaks into flame; it wheels and roars and raves
And wraps the welkin in its folding waves.
Light sailing cinders, thro its vortex driven,
Stream high and brighten to the midst of heaven;

And, following slow, full floods of boiling ore
Swell, swoop aloft and thro the concave roar.
Torrents of molten rocks, on every side,
Lead o'er the shelves of ice their fiery tide;
Hills slide before them, skies around them burn,
Towns sink beneath and heaving plains upturn;
O'er many a league the flaming deluge hurl'd,
Sweeps total nations from the staggering world.
Meanwhile, at distance thro the livid light,
A busy concourse met their wondering sight;
The prince drew near; where lo! an altar stood,
Rude in its form and fill'd with burning wood;
Wrapt in the flames a child expiring lay
And the fond father thus was heard to pray:
Receive, O dreadful power, from feeble age
This last pure offering (23) to thy sateless rage;
Thrice has thy vengeance on this hated land
Claim'd a dear infant from my yielding hand,
Thrice have those lovely lips the victim prest,
And all the mother torn that tender breast,
When the dread duty stifled every sigh
And not a tear escaped her beauteous eye.

Our fourth and last now meets the fatal doom;
Groan not, my child, thy god remands thee home;
Attend once more, thou dark infernal name,
From yon far streaming pyramid of flame;
Snatch from his heaving flesh the blasted breath,
Sacred to thee and all the fiends of death;
Then in thy hall, with spoils of nations crown'd,
Confine thy walks beneath the rending ground;
No more on earth the embowel'd flames to pour,
And scourge my people and my race no more.

Thus Rocha heard; and to the trembling crowd
Turn'd the bright image of his beaming god.
The afflicted chief with fear and grief opprest
Beheld the sign and thus the prince addrest:
From what far land, O royal stranger, say,
Ascend thy wandering steps this nightly way?
From plains like ours, by holy demons fired?
Have thy brave people in the flames expired?
And hast thou now, to stay the whelming flood,
No son to offer to the furious god?

From happier lands I came, the prince returns,
Where no red flaming flood the concave burns,

No furious god bestorms our soil and skies
Nor yield our hands the bloody sacrifice;
But life and joy the Power delights to give
And bids his children but rejoice and live.
Thou seest thro heaven the day-dispensing Sun
In living radiance wheel his golden throne,
O'er earth's gay surface send his genial beams,
Force from yon cliffs of ice the vernal streams;
While fruits and flowers adorn the cultured field,
And seas and lakes their copious treasures yield:
He reigns our only god. In him we trace
The friend, the father of our happy race.
Late the lone tribes, on those unlabor'd shores,
Ran wild and served imaginary powers;
Till he in pity taught their feuds to cease,
Devised their laws and fashion'd all for peace.
My sacred parents first the reign began,
Sent from his courts to guide the paths of man,
To plant his fruits, to manifest his sway
And give their blessings where he gives the day.
The sachem proud replied: Thy garb and face
Proclaim thy lineage of superior race;

And our progenitors, no less than thine,
Sprang from a god and own a birth divine.
From that sky-scorching mount, on floods of flame,
In elder times my great forefathers came;
There dwells the sire and from his dark abode
Oft claims as now the tribute of a god.
This victim due when willing mortals pay,
His terrors lessen and his fires decay;
While purer sleet regales the mountain air,
And our glad hosts are fired for fiercer war.
  Yet know, dread chief, the pious youth rejoin'd,
Some one prime Power produced all human kind;
Some sire supreme, whose ever ruling soul
Creates, preserves and regulates the whole.
That sire supreme must roll his radiant eye
Round the wide earth and thro the boundless sky;
That all their habitants, their gods and men,
May rise unveil'd beneath his careful ken.
Could thy dark fiend, that hides his blind abode
And canldrons in his cave that fiery flood,
Yield the rich fruits that distant nations find,
Or praise or punish or behold mankind?

But when my god, resurging from the night,
Shall gild his chambers with the morning light,
By mystic rites he'll vindicate his throne
And own thy servant for his duteous son.
  Meantime, the chief replied, thy cares releast,
Rest here the night and share our scanty feast;
Which, driven in hasty rout, our train supplied,
When trembling earth foretold the boiling tide.
They fared, they rested; till with lucid horn
All cheering Phosphor led the lively morn;
The prince arose, an altar rear'd in haste,
And watcht the splendors of the reddening east.
  As o'er the mountain flamed the sun's broad eye,
He call'd the host, his holy rites to try;
Then took the loaves of maiz, the bounties brake,
Gave to the chief and bade them all partake;
The hallow'd relics on the pile he placed,
With tufts of flowers the simple offering graced,
Held to the sun the image from his breast,
Whose glowing concave (24) all the god exprest;
O'er the dried leaves the rays concentred fly,
And thus his voice ascends the listening sky:

O thou, whose splendors kindle heaven with fire,
Great soul of nature, man's immortal sire,
If e'er my father found thy sovereign grace,
Or thy blest will ordain'd the Incan race,
Give these lorn tribes to learn thy awful name,
Receive this offering and the pile inflame;
So shall thy laws o'er wider bounds be known
And earth's whole race be happy as thy own.
Thus pray'd the prince; the focal flames aspire,
The mute beholders tremble and retire,
Gaze on the miracle, full credence own
And vow obedience to the sacred Sun.
The legates now their further course descried,
A young cazique attending as a guide,
O'er craggy cliffs pursued their eastern way,
Trod loftier champaigns, meeting high the day,
Saw timorous tribes in these sublime abodes
Adore the blasts and turn the storms to gods;
While every cloud that thunders thro the skies
Claims from their hands a human sacrifice.
Awhile the youth, their better faith to gain,
Strives with his usual art, but strives in vain;

In vain he pleads the mildness of the sun;
A gale refutes him ere his speech be done;
Continual tempests from their orient blow
And load the mountains with eternal snow.
The sun's own beam, the timid clans declare,
Drives all their evils on the tortured air;
He draws the vapors up their eastern sky,
That sail and centre round his dazzling eye;
Leads the loud storms along his midday course
And bids the Andes meet their sweeping force,
Builds their bleak summits with an icy throne,
To shine thro heaven, a semblance of his own;
Hence the sharp sleet, these lifted lawns that wait,
And all the scourges that attend their state.
  Two toilsome days the virtuous Inca strove
To social life their savage minds to move;
When the third morning glow'd serenely bright,
He led their elders to an eastern height;
The world unlimited beneath them lay
And not a cloud obscured the rising day.
Vast Amazonia, starr'd with twinkling streams,
In azure drest, a heaven inverted seems;

Dim Paraguay extends the aching sight,
Xaraya glimmers (25) like the moon of night,
Land, water, sky in blending borders play
And smile and brighten to the lamp of day.
When thus the prince: What majesty divine!
What robes of gold! what flames about him shine!
There walks the god; his starry sons on high
Draw their dim veil and shrink behind the sky;
Earth with surrounding nature 's born a new,
And men by millions greet the glorious view.
Who can behold his all delighting soul
Give life and joy, and heaven and earth control,
Bid death and darkness from his presence move,
Who can behold and not adore and love?
Those plains, immensely circling, feel his beams,
He greens the groves, he silvers gay the streams,
Swells the wild fruitage, gives the beast his food,
And mute creation hails the genial god.
But richer boons his righteous laws impart,
To aid the life and mould the social heart,
His arts of peace thro happy realms to spread,
And altars grace with sacrificial bread;

Such our distinguisht lot, who own his sway,
Mild as his morning stars and liberal as the day.
  His unknown laws, the mountain chief replied,
May serve perchance your boasted race to guide;
And yon low plains, that drink his partial ray,
At his glad shrine their just devotions pay.
But we nor fear his frown nor trust his smile;
Vain as our prayers is every anxious toil;
Our beasts are buried in his whirls of snow,
Our cabins drifted to his slaves below.
Even now his placid looks thy hopes beguile,
He lures thy raptures with a morning smile;
But soon (for so those saffron robes proclaim)
His own black tempest shall obstruct his flame,
Storm, thunder, fire against the mountains driven,
Rake deep their sulfur'd sides, disgorging here his heaven.
  He spoke; they waited, till the fervid ray
High from the noontide shot the faithless day;
When lo, far gathering under eastern skies,
Solemn and slow, the dark red vapors rise;
Full clouds, convolving on the turbid air,
Move like an ocean to the watery war.

The host, securely raised, no dangers harm,
They sit unclouded and o'erlook the storm;
While far beneath, the sky-borne waters ride,
Veil the dark deep and sheet the mountain's side;
The lightning's glancing fires in fury curl'd
Bend their long forky foldings o'er the world;
Torrents and broken crags and floods of rain
From steep to steep roll down their force amain
In dreadful cataracts; the bolts confound
The tumbling clouds and rock the solid ground.
The blasts unburden'd take their upward course
And o'er the mountain top resume their force.
Swift thro the long white ridges from the north,
The rapid whirlwinds lead their terrors forth;
High walks the storm, the circling surges rise
And wild gyrations wheel the hovering skies;
Vast hills of snow, in sweeping columns driven,
Deluge the air and choke the void of heaven;
Floods burst their bounds, the rocks forget their place,
And the firm Andes tremble to their base.
Long gazed the host; when thus the stubborn chief,
With eyes on fire, and fill'd with sullen grief:

Behold thy careless god, secure on high,
Laughs at our woes and peaceful walks the sky,
Drives all his evils on these seats sublime
And wafts his favors to a happier clime;
Sire of the dastard race thy words disclose,
There glads his children, here afflicts his foes.
Hence! speed thy flight! pursue him where he leads,
Lest vengeance seize thee for thy father's deeds,
Thy immolated limbs assuage the fire
Of those curst powers, who now a gift require.
  The youth in haste collects his scanty train
And with the sun flies o'er the western plain;
The fading orb with plaintive voice he plies,
To guide his steps and light him down the skies.
So when the moon and all the host of even
Hang pale and trembling on the verge of heaven,
While storms ascending threat their nightly reign,
They seek their absent sire and sink below the main.
  Now to the south he turns; where one vast plain
Calls from a hundred hordes the warrior train;
Of various dress and various form they show'd,
Each wore the ensign of his local god.

From eastern hills a grisly troop descends,
Whose war song wild the shuddering concave rends;
Cloked in a tiger's hide their grim chief towers
And apes the brinded god his tribe adores.
The tusky jaws grin o'er the sachem's brow,
The bald eyes glare, the paws depend below,
From his bored ears contorted serpents hung,
And drops of gore seem'd rolling on his tongue.
The northern glens pour forth the Vulture-race;
Brown tufts of quills their shaded foreheads grace,
The claws branch wide, the beak expands for blood,
And all the armor imitates the god.
The condor, (26) frowning from a southern plain,
Born on a standard, leads a numerous train:
Clencht in his talons hangs an infant dead
His long bill pointing where the sachems tread,
His wings tho lifeless frighten still the wind,
And his broad tail o'ershades the file behind.
From other plains and other hills afar,
The tribes throng dreadful to the promised war;
Some twine their forelock with a crested snake
Some wear the emblems of a stream or lake;

All from the power they serve assume their mode
And foam and yell to taste the Incan blood.
The prince incautious with his men drew near,
Known for an Inca by his dress and air,
Till coop'd and caught amid the warrior trains,
They bow in silence to the victor's chains.
When now the gather'd thousands throng the plain
And echoing skies the rending shouts retain,
Zamor, the chieftain of the tiger-band,
By choice appointed to the first command,
Shrugg'd up his brinded spoils above the rest
And grimly frowning thus the crowd addrest:
Warriors, attend! tomorrow leads abroad
Our sacred vengeance for our brother's blood,
On those scorcht plains for ever must they lie,
Their bones still naked to the burning sky?
Left in the field for foreign hawks to tear
Nor our own vultures can the banquet share.
But soon, ye mountain gods, yon dreary west
Shall sate your hunger with an ampler feast;
When the proud Sun, that terror of the plain,
Shall grieve in heaven for all his children slain,

As o'er his realm our slaughtering armies roam
And give to your sad powers a happier home.
Meanwhile, ye tribes, these men of solar race,
Food for the flames, your bloody rites shall grace;
Each to a different god his panting breath
Resigns in fire; this night demands their death:
All but the Inca; him reserved in state
These conquering hands ere long shall immolate
To all the powers at once that storm the skies,
A grateful gift, before his mother's eyes.
The sachem ceased; the chiefs of every race
Lead the bold captives to their destined place;
The sun descends, the parting day expires
And earth and heaven display their sparkling fires.
Soon the raised altars kindle round the gloom
And call the victims to their vengeful doom;
Led to their pyres, in sullen pomp they tread
And sing by turns the triumphs of the dead.
Amid the crowd beside his altar stood
The youth devoted to the tiger-god;
A beauteous form he rose, of noble grace,
The only hope of his illustrious race.

His aged sire for numerous years had shone
The first supporter of the Incan throne;
Wise Capac loved the youth and graced his hand
With a fair virgin from a neighboring band;
And him the legate prince, in equal prime,
Had chose to share his mission round the clime.
He mounts the pyre, the flames approach his breath,
And thus he wakes the dauntless song of death:
Dark vault of heaven, that greet his daily throne,
Where flee the glories of your absent Sun?
Ye starry hosts, who kindle from his eye,
Can you behold him in the western sky?
Or if unseen beneath his watery bed,
The wearied god reclines his radiant head,
When next his morning steps your courts inflame
And seek on earth for young Azonto's name,
Then point these ashes, mark the smoky pile
And say the hero suffer'd with a smile.
So shall the Power in vengeance view the place,
In crimson clothe (27) his terror-beaming face,
Pour swift destruction on these curst abodes,
Whelm the grim tribes and all their savage gods.

But ah, forbear to tell my stooping sire
His darling hopes have fed a coward fire;
Why should he know the tortures of the brave?
Why fruitless sorrows bend him to the grave?
Nor shalt thou e'er be told, my bridal fair,
What silent pangs these panting vitals tear,
But blooming still the patient hours employ
On the blind hope of future scenes of joy.
Now haste, ye fiends of death; the sire of day
In absent slumber gives your malice way;
While fainter light these livid flames supply,
And shortlived thousands learn of me to die.
He ceased not speaking; when the yell of war
Drowns all their death songs in a hideous jar;
The cries rebounding from the hillsides pour,
And wolves and tigers catch the distant roar.
Now more concordant all their voices join,
And round the plain they form the festive line;
When, to the music of the dismal din,
Indignant Zamor bids the dance begin.
Dim thro the shadowy fires each changing form
Moves like a cloud before an evening storm,

When o'er the moon's pale face and starry plain
The shifting shades lead on their broken train;
The mingling tribes their mazy gambols tread,
Till the last groan proclaims the victims dead,
Then part the smoky flesh, enjoy the feast
And lose their labors in oblivious rest.

Soon as the western hills announced the morn,
And falling fires were scarcely seen to burn,
Grimm'd by the horrors of the dreadful night,
The hosts woke fiercer for the promised fight;
And dark and silent thro the frowning grove,
The different tribes beneath their standards move.

Meantime the solar king collects from far
His martial bands to meet the expected war,
Camps on the confines of an eastern plain
That skirts the steep rough limit of his reign;
He trains their ranks, their pliant force combines,
To close in columns or extend in lines,
To wheel, change front, in broken files dispart
And draw new strength from all the warrior's art.

But now the rising sun relumes the plain
And calls to arms the well accustom'd train.

High in the front imperial Capac strode
In fair effulgence like the beaming god;
A golden girdle bound his snowy vest,
A mimic sun hung sparkling on his breast;
The lautu's horned wreath his temples twined,
The bow, the quiver shade his waist behind;
Raised high in air his golden sceptre burn'd,
And hosts surrounding trembled as he turn'd.
O'er eastern hills he cast his watchful eye,
Thro the broad breaks that lengthen down the sky;
In whose blue clefts the sloping pathways bend,
Where annual floods from melting snows descend.
Now dry and deep, they lead from every height
The savage files that headlong rush to fight;
They throng and thicken thro the smoky air,
And every breach pours down the dusky war.
So when a hundred streams explore their way
Down the same slopes, convolving to the sea,
They boil, they bend, they force their floods amain,
Swell o'er obstructing crags and sweep the plain.
  Capac beholds and waits the coming shock,
As for the billows waits the storm-beat rock;

And while for fight his ardent troops prepare,
Thus thro the ranks he breathes the soul of war.
Ye tribes that flourish in the sun's mild reign,
Long have your flocks adorn'd the peaceful plain,
As o'er the realm his smiles persuasive flow'd
And conquer'd all without the stain of blood;
But lo, at last that wild infuriate band
With savage war demands your happy land.
Beneath the dark immeasurable host,
Descending, swarming, how the crags are lost!
Already now their ravening eyes behold
Your star-bright temples and your gates of gold;
And to their gods in fancied goblets pour
The warm libation of your children's gore.
Move then to vengeance, meet the sons of blood,
Led by this arm and lighted by that god;
The strife is fierce, your fanes and fields the prize;
The warrior conquers or the infant dies.
Fill'd with his fire, the troops in squared array
Wait the wild hordes loose huddling to the fray;
Their pointed arrows, rising on the bow,
Look up the sky and chide the lagging foe.

Dread Zamor leads the homicidious train,
Moves from the clefts and stretches o'er the plain.
He gives the shriek; the deep convulsing sound
The hosts reecho, and the hills around
Retain the rending tumult; all the air
Clangs in the conflict of the clashing war.
But firm undaunted as a shelvy strand
That meets the surge, the bold Peruvians stand,
With steady aim the sounding bowstring ply,
And showers of arrows thicken thro the sky;
When each grim host, in closer conflict join'd,
Clench the dire ax and cast the bow behind;
Thro broken ranks sweep wide their slaughtering course,
Now struggle back, now sidelong sway the force.
Here from grim chiefs is lopt the grisly head;
All gride the dying, all deface the dead;
There scattering o'er the field in thin array,
Man tugs with man, and clubs with axes play;
With broken shafts they follow and they fly,
And yells and groans and shouts invade the sky;
Round all the shatter'd groves the ground is strow'd
With sever'd limbs and corses bathed in blood.

Long raged the strife; and where on either side
A friend, a father or a brother died,
No trace remain'd of what he was before,
Mangled with horrid wounds and black with gore.
  Now the Peruvians, in collected might,
With one wide stroke had wing'd the savage flight;
But their bright godhead, in his midday race,
With glooms unusual veil'd his radiant face,
Quencht all his beams, tho cloudless, as in pain,
To view from heaven the havoc of the plain;
The walking stars, rejoicing at the sight,
Peep out and gem the anticipated night;
Day-birds and beasts of light to covert fly,
And owls and wolves begin their evening cry.
The astonisht Inca marks, with wild surprise,
Dead chills on earth, no cloud in all the skies,
His host o'ershaded in the field of blood,
Gored by his foes, deserted by his god.
Mute with amaze, they cease the war to wage,
Gaze on their leaders and forget their rage;
When pious Capac to the listening crowd
Raised high his wand and pour'd his voice aloud;

Peruvians hold! Our god forsakes the plain,
Nor saves his children nor beholds them slain?
Fly! speed your course, regain the guardian town;
Safe in our walls we 'll deprecate his frown,
And seek returning grace, denied us here;
Haste, haste my sons! I guard the flying rear.
  The hero spoke; the trembling tribes obey,
While deeper glooms obscure the source of day.
Sudden the savage bands collect amain,
Hang on the rear and sweep them o'er the plain;
Their shouts, redoubling with the flying war,
Drown the loud groans and torture all the air.
The hawks of heaven, that o'er the field had stood,
Scared by the tumult from the scent of blood,
Cleave the far gloom; the beasts forget their prey
And scour the waste and give the war its way.
  Zamor elate with horrid joy beheld
The Sun depart, his children fly the field,
And raised his rending voice: Thou darkening sky,
Deepen thy damps, the fiend of death is nigh;
Behold him rising from his shadowy throne,
To veil this heaven and drive the conquer'd Sun;

The glaring godhead yields to sacred night,
And his foil'd armies imitate his flight.
Confirm, infernal power, thy rightful reign,
Give deadlier shades and heap the piles of slain;
Soon the young captive prince shall roll in fire,
And all his race accumulate the pyre.
Ye mountain vultures, here your food explore,
Tigers and condors, all ye gods of gore,
In these rich fields, beneath your frowning sky,
A plenteous feast shall every god supply.
Rush forward warriors, hide the plains with dead;
Twas here our friends in former combat bled;
Strow'd thro the waste their naked bones demand
This tardy vengeance from our conquering hand.
He said; and high before the tiger-train
With longer strides hangs forward o'er the slain,
Bends, like a falling tree, to reach the foe
And o'er tall Capac aims a forceful blow.
The king beheld the ax, and with his wand
Struck the raised weapon from the sachem's hand;
Then clencht the falling helve, and whirling round,
Fell'd a close file of heroes to the ground;

Nor stay'd, but follow'd where his people run,
Fearing to fight, forsaken by the Sun;
Till Cusco's walls salute their longing sight,
And the wide gates receive their rapid flight.
The folds are barr'd, the foes in shade conceal'd,
Like howling wolves, rave round the frighted field.
The monarch now ascends the sacred dome;
The sun's fixt image there partakes the gloom;
Thro all the shrines, where erst on new-moon (28) days
Swell'd the full quires of consecrated praise,
A tomb-like silence reigns; till female cries
Burst forth at last, and these sad accents rise:
Was it for this, my son to distant lands
Must trace the wilds and tempt those lawless bands?
And does the god obscure his golden throne
In mournful darkness for my slaughter'd son?
Oh, had his beam, ere that disastrous day
That call'd the youth from these fond arms away,
Received my spirit to its native sky,
That sad Oella might have seen him die!
Where slept thy shaft of vengeance, O my god!
When those fell tigers drank his sacred blood?

Did not the pious prince, with rites divine,
Feed the pure flame in this thy hallow'd shrine?
And early learn, beneath his father's hand,
To shed thy blessings round the favor'd land?
Form'd by thy laws the royal seat to grace,
Son of thy son and glory of his race.
Where, my lost Rocha, rests thy lovely head?
Where the rent robes thy hapless mother made?
I see thee mid those hideous hills of snow
Pursued and slaughter'd by the wildman foe;
Or doom'd a feast for some pretended god
Drench his black altar with celestial blood.
Snatch me, O Sun, to happier worlds of light—
No, shroud me, shroud me with thyself in night.
Thou hear'st me not, thou dread departed Power,
Thy face is dark and Rocha lives no more.
Thus heard the silent king; his equal heart
Caught all her grief and bore a father's part.
The cause suggested by her tender moan,
The cause perchance that veil'd the midday sun,
And shouts that spoke the still approaching foe
Fixt him suspense, in all the strength of woe.

A doubtful moment held his changing choice;
Now would he sooth her, half assumes his voice;
But greater cares the rising wish control
And call forth all his energy of soul.
Why should he cease to ward the coming fate,
Or she be told the foes besiege the gate?
He turn'd in haste; and now their image-god
High on the spire with newborn lustre glow'd;
Swift thro the portal flew the hero's eye
And hail'd the growing splendor in the sky.
  The troops courageous at return of light
Throng round the dome, impatient for the fight;
The king descending in the portal stood
And thus addrest the all-delighting god:
O sovereign soul of heaven, thy changing face
Makes or destroys the glory of thy race.
If from this mortal life my child be fled,
First of thy line that ever graced the dead;
If thy bright splendor ceased on high to burn
For that loved youth who never must return,
Forgive thine armies, when in fields of blood
They lose their strength and fear their frowning god.

As now thy glory with superior day
Glows thro the field and leads the warrior's way,
May our exalted souls, to vengeance driven,
Burn with new brightness in the cause of heaven.
For thy slain son the murderous horde shall bleed;
We mourn the hero, but avenge the deed.
He said; and from the battlement on high
A watchful warrior raised a sudden cry:
"An Inca white on yonder altar tied—
Tis Rocha's self—the flame ascends his side."
In sweeping haste the bursting gates unbar
And flood the champaign with a tide of war;
A cloud of arrows leads the rapid train,
They shout, they swarm, they hide the dusty plain;
Bows, quivers, girdles strow the field behind,
And the raised axes cleave the passing wind.
The prince, confest to every warrior's sight,
Inspires each soul and centres all the fight;
Each hopes to snatch him from the kindling pyre,
Each fears his breath already flits in fire.
Here Zamor ranged his ax-men deep and wide,
Wedged like a wall, and thus the king defied:

Haste! son of light, pour fast the winged war,
The prince, the dying prince demands your care;
Hear how his death song chides your dull delay,
Lift longer strides, bend forward to the fray,
Ere flames infolding suffocate his groan,
Child of your beaming god, a victim to our own.
This said, he raised his shaggy shoulders high
And bade the shafts glide thicker thro the sky.
Like the broad billows of the lifted main
Rolls into sight the long Peruvian train;
A white sail bounding on the billows tost,
Is Capac towering o'er the furious host.
Now meet the dreadful chiefs, with eyes on fire;
Beneath their blows the parting ranks retire;
In whirlwind-sweep their meeting axes bound,
Wheel, crash in air and plow the trembling ground;
Their sinewy limbs in fierce contortions bend.
And mutual strokes with equal force descend,
Parried with equal art, now gyring prest
High at the head, now plunging for the breast.
The king starts backward from the struggling foe,
Collects new strength and with a circling blow

Rusht furious on; his flinty edge whirl'd wide
Met Zamor's helve and glancing grazed his side
And settled in his groin; so plunged it lay,
That scarce the king could tear his ax away.
The savage fell; when thro the tiger-train
The driving Inca turns his force amain;
Where still compact they hem the murderous pyre,
And Rocha's voice seems faltering to expire.
The frenzied father rages, thunders wild,
Hews armies down to save the sinking child;
The ranks fall staggering where he lifts his arm
Or roll before him like a billowy storm;
Behind his steps collecting warriors close;
Deep centred in a circling ridge of foes
He cleaves his wasting way; the prince unties,
And thus his voice: Dread sovereign of the skies,
Accept my living son again bestow'd
To grace with rites the temple of his god.
Move, heroes, move; complete the work begun,
Crush the grim race, avenge your injured Sun.
The savage host, that view'd the daring deed
And saw their nations with their captain bleed,

Raised high the shriek of horror; all the plain
Is trod with flight and cover'd with the slain.
The bold Peruvians compass round the field,
Confine their flight and force the rest to yield;
When Capac raised his placid voice again:
Ye conquering troops, collect the vanquisht train;
The Sun commands to stay the rage of war,
He knows to conquer, but he loves to spare.
He ceased; and where the savage leader lay
Weltering in gore, directs his eager way,
Unwraps the tiger's hide and strives in vain
To close the wound and mitigate the pain;
And while compassion for a foe distrest
Mixt with reproach, he thus the chief addrest:
Too long, proud prince, thy fearless heart withstood
Our sacred arms and braved the living god;
His sovereign will commands all feuds to cease,
His realm is concord and his pleasure peace;
This copious carnage, spreading far the plain,
Insults his bounties, but confirms his reign.
Enough; tis past; thy parting breath demands
The last sad office from my yielding hands.

To share thy pains and feel thy hopeless woe
Are rites ungrateful to a fallen foe;
Yet rest in peace; and know, a chief so brave,
When life departs, shall find an honor'd grave;
Myself in princely pomp thy tomb shall rear
And tribes unborn thy hapless fate declare.
  Insult me not with tombs! the monster cried,
Let closing clods thy coward carcase hide;
But these brave bones unburied on the plain
Touch not with dust nor dare with rites profane;
Let no curst earth conceal this gory head,
Nor songs proclaim the dreadful Zamor dead.
Me, whom the hungry gods from plain to plain
Have follow'd, feasting on thy slaughter'd train,
Me wouldst thou cover? no! from yonder sky,
The wide-beak hawk, that now beholds me die,
Soon with his cowering train my flesh shall tear,
And wolves and tigers vindicate their share.
Receive, dread powers (since I can slay no more),
My last glad victim, this devoted gore.
  Thus pour'd the vengeful chief his fainting breath
And lost his utterance in the gasp of death.

The sad remaining tribes confess the power,
That sheds his bounties round Peruvia's shore;
All bow obedient to the Incan throne,
And blest Oella hails her living son.

BOOK IV.

ARGUMENT.

Destruction of Peru foretold. Grief of Columbus. He is comforted by the promise of a vision of future ages. All Europe appears in vision. Effect of the discovery of America upon the affairs of Europe. Improvement in commerce; government. Revival of letters. Order of the Jesuits. Religious persecution. Inquisition. Rise and progress of more liberal principles. Character of Raleigh; who plans the settlement of North America. Formation of the coast by the gulf stream. Nature of the colonial establishments, the first great asylum and infant empire of liberty. Liberty the necessary foundation of morals. Delaware arrives with a reinforcement of new settlers, to consolidate the colony of Virginia. Night scene, as contemplated by these patriarchs, while they are sailing up the Chesapeak, and are saluted by the river gods. Prophetic speech of Patomac. Fleets of settlers from several parts of Europe steering for America.

COLUMBIAD.

BOOK IV.

In one dark age beneath a single hand,
Thus rose an empire in the savage land.
Its wealth and power with following years increase,
Its growing nations spread the walks of peace;
Religion here, that universal name,
Man's proudest passion, most ungovern'd flame,
Erects her altars on the same bright base,
That dazzled erst and still deludes the race;
Sun, moon, all powers that forceful strike his eyes,
Earth-shaking storms and constellated skies.
  Yet all the pomp his labors here unfold,
The vales of verdure and the towers of gold,

Those infant arts and sovereign seats of state,
In short-lived glory hasten to their fate.
Thy followers, rushing like an angry flood,
Too soon shall drench them in the nation's blood;
Nor thou, Las Casas, (9) best of men, shalt stay
The ravening legions from their guardless prey.
O hapless prelate, hero, saint and sage!
Foredoom'd with crimes a fruitless war to wage,
To see at last, thy life of virtue run,
A realm unpeopled and a world undone!
While impious Valverde, mock of priesthood stands,
Guilt in his heart, the gospel in his hands,
Bids in one field their unarm'd thousands bleed,
Smiles o'er the scene and sanctifies the deed.
And thou, brave Gasca, with persuasive strain,
Shalt lift thy voice and urge thy power in vain;
Vain are thy hopes the sinking land to save
Or call her slaughter'd millions from the grave.
  Here Hesper paused. Columbus with a sigh
Cast o'er the continent his moisten'd eye
And thus replied: Ah, hide me in the tomb;
Why should I live to see the impending doom?

If such foul deeds the scheme of heaven compose,
And virtue's toils induce redoubled woes,
Unfold no more; but grant a kind release;
Give me, tis all I ask, to rest in peace.
  And thou shalt rest in peace, the Saint rejoin'd,
Ere these conflicting shades involve mankind.
But broader views shall first thy mind engage,
Years far advanced beyond this darksome age
Shall feast thee here; the fruits of thy long care
A grateful world beneath thy ken shall share.
Europe's contending kings shall soon behold
These fertile plains and hills of treasured gold;
And in the path of thy adventurous sail
Their countless navies float on every gale;
For wealth and commerce search the western shore
And load each ocean with the shining ore.
  As up the orient heaven the dawning ray
Smiles o'er the hills and gives the promised day,
Drives fraud and rapine from their nightly spoil,
And social nature wakes to various toil;
So from the blazing mine the golden store
Mid rival states shall spread from shore to shore,

Unite their force, its opulence to share,
Extend the pomp but sooth the rage of war;
Wide thro the world while genius unconfined
Tempts loftier flights and opens all the mind,
Dissolves the slavish bands of monkish lore,
Wakes the bold arts and bids the Muses soar.
Then shall thy northern climes their seats display,
United nations there commence their sway;
O'er earth and ocean spread their peerless fame
And send thro time thy patriarchal name.
  Now turn thy view to Europe; see the rage
Of feudal faction every court engage;
All honest labor, all commercial ties
Their kings discountenance, their lords despise.
The naked harbors looking to the main
Rear their kind cliffs and break the storms in vain,
The willing wave no foreign treasures lade,
Nor sails nor cities cast a watery shade;
Save, where yon opening gulf the strand divides,
Proud Venice bathes her in the broken tides,
Weds her tamed sea, shakes every distant throne
And deems by right the naval world her own.

Yet must we mark, the bondage of the mind
Spreads deeper glooms and subjugates mankind;
The zealots fierce, whom local creeds enrage,
In holy feuds perpetual combat wage,
Support all crimes by full indulgence given,
Usurp the power and wield the sword of heaven.

But lo, where future years their scenes unrol,
The rising arts inspire the venturous soul.
From all the ports that cleave the coast of Spain,
New fleets ascending streak the western main;
From Tago's bank, from Albion's rocky round,
Commercing squadrons o'er the billows bound;
Thro Afric's isles observe the sweeping sails,
Full pinions tossing in Arabian gales,
Indus and Ganges deep in canvas lost
And navies crowding round Cambodia's coast;
New nations rise, all climes and oceans brave
And shade with sheets the immeasurable wave.

See lofty Ximenes with solemn gait
Move from the cloister to the walks of state,
And thro the factious monarchies of Spain
Curb the fierce lords and fix one royal reign.

Behold dread Charles the imperial seat ascends,
O'er Europe's thrones his conquering arm extends;
While wealthier shores beneath the western day
Unfold their treasures to confirm his sway.
Roused at false glory's fascinating call,
See Francis train the gallant youths of Gaul,
O'erstrain the strength of her extended states,
Scale the proud Alps or burst their granite gates,
On Pavia's plain for Cesar's crown contend,
Of arms the votary but of arts the friend.
And see proud Wolsey rise, securely great,
Kings at his call and mitres round him wait;
From monkish walls the hoarded wealth he draws
To aid the tyrant and restrain the laws,
Wakes Albion's genius, neighboring princes braves
And shares with them the commonwealth of waves.
Behold dark Solyman from eastern skies
With his grim host magnificently rise,
Wave his broad crescent o'er the midland sea,
Thro vast Hungaria drive his conquering way,
Crowd close the christian powers and carry far
The rules of homicide, the lore of war.

The Tuscan dukes excite a nobler strife;
Lorenzo calls the Fine Arts forth to life,
Fair nature's mimic maids; whose powers divine,
Her charms develop and her laws define;
From sire to son the splendid labors spread,
And Leo follows where good Cosmo led.
Waked from the ground that Gothic rovers trod
Starts the bronze hero and the marble god;
Monks, prelates, pontiffs pay the reverence due
To that bold taste their Grecian masters knew;
Resurgent temples throng the Latian shore,
The pencil triumphs and the Muses soar.
O'er the dark world Erasmus rears his eye,
In schoolman lore sees kings and nations lie,
With strength of judgment and with fancy warm
Derides their follies and dissolves the charm,
Tears the deep veil that bigot zeal has thrown
On pagan books and science long unknown,
From faith in senseless rites relieves mankind
And seats bold virtue in the conscious mind.
But still the frightful task, to face alone
The jealous vengeance of the papal throne,

Restrains his hand; he gives the contest o'er
And leaves his hardier sons to curb that power.
Luther walks forth in yon majestic frame,
Bright beam of heaven and heir of endless fame,
Born like thyself thro toils and griefs to wind,
From slavery's chains to free the captive mind,
Brave adverse crowns, control the pontiff sway
And bring benighted nations into day.
Remark what crowds his name around him brings,
Schools, synods, prelates, potentates and kings,
All gaining knowledge from his boundless store,
And join'd to shield him from the papal power.
First of his friends see Frederic's (30) princely form
Ward from the sage divine the gathering storm,
In learned Wittemburgh secure his seat,
High throne of thought, religion's safe retreat.
There sits Melancthon, mild as morning light,
And feuds, tho sacred, soften in his sight;
In terms so gentle flows his tuneful tongue,
Even cloister'd bigots join the pupil throng;
By all sectarian chiefs he lives approved,
By monarchs courted (31) and by men beloved.

And lo, where Europe's utmost limits bend,
From this new source what various lights ascend!
See haughty Henry, from the papal tie
His realms dissever and the priest defy;
While Albion's sons disdain a foreign throne
And learn to bound the oppressions of their own.
Then rises Loyola, a strange new name,
By paths unseen to reach the goal of fame;
Thro courts and camps he teaches how to wind,
To mine whole states and overreach mankind.
Train'd in his school, a bold and artful race
Range o'er the world and every sect embrace,
All creeds and powers and policies explore,
New seats of science raise on every shore;
Till their wide empire gains a wondrous birth,
Built in all empires o'er this ancient earth.
Our wildmen too, the tribes of Paraguay,
Receive their rites and bow beneath their sway.
The world of men thus moving in thy view
Improve their state, more useful works pursue;
Unwonted deeds in rival greatness shine,
Call'd into life and first inspired by thine.

So while imperial Homer tunes the lyre,
His living lays unnumber'd bards inspire;
From age to age the kindling spirit flies,
Sounds thro the earth and echoes to the skies.
Now roll the years, when Europe's ample space
By peace and culture rears a wiser race,
Men bred to labor, school'd in freedom's lore
And form'd to colonize our favorite shore.
To speed their course, the sons of bigot rage
In persecution whelm the inquiring age;
Myriads of martyr'd heroes mount the pyre,
And blind devotion lights the sacred fire.
  Led by the dark Dominicans of Spain,
A newborn Fury walks the wide domain,
Gaunt Inquisition; mark her giant stride,
Her blood-nursed vulture screaming at her side.
Her priestly train the tools of torment brings,
Racks, wheels and crosses, faggots, stakes and strings;
Scaffolds and cages round her altar stand,
And, tipt with sulphur, waves her flaming brand.
Her imps of inquest round the fiend advance,
Suspectors grave and spies with eye askance,

Pretended heretics who worm the soul,
And sly confessors with their secret scroll,
Accusers hired, for each conviction paid,
Judges retain'd and witnesses by trade.
Dragg'd from a thousand jails her victim trains,
Jews, Moors and Christians clank alike their chains,
Read their known sentence in her fiery eyes
And breathe to heaven their unavailing cries;
Lasht on the pile their writhing bodies turn
And veil'd in doubling smoke begin to burn.
Where the flames open, lo their limbs in vain
Reach out for help, distorted by the pain;
Till folded in the fires they disappear
And not a sound invades the startled ear.
See Philip throned in insolence and pride
Enjoy their wailings and their pangs deride;
While o'er the same dread scenes on Albion's isles
His well taught spouse, the cruel Mary smiles.
What clouds of smoke hang heavy round the shore!
What altars hecatomb'd with christian gore!
Her sire's best friends, the wise, the brave, the good,
Roll in the flames or fly the land of blood.

To Gallia's plains the maddening frenzy turns,
Religion raves and civil discord burns;
Leaguers and Huguenots their vengeance pour,
They swell Bartholemy's wide feast of gore,
Alternate victors bid their gibbets rise,
And the foul stench of victims chokes the skies.
Now cease the factions with the Valois line,
And Bourbon's virtues every voice combine.
Quell'd by his fame, the furious sects accord,
Europe respires beneath his guardian sword;
Batavia's states to independence soar
And curb the cohorts of Iberian power.
From Albion's ports her infant navies heave,
Stretch forth and thunder on the Flandrian wave;
Her Howard there first foils the force of Spain
And there begins her mastery of the main.
The Seraph spoke; when full beneath their eye,
A new form'd squadron rose along the sky,
High on the tallest deck majestic shone
Sage Raleigh, pointing to the western sun;
His eye, bent forward, ardent and sublime,
Seem'd piercing nature and evolving time;

Beside him stood a globe, whose figure traced
A future empire in each present waste;
All former works of men behind him shone
Graved by his hand in ever during stone;
On his calm brow a various crown displays
The hero's laurel and the scholar's bays;
His graceful limbs in steely mail were drest,
The bright star burning on his lofty breast;
His sword high waving flasht the solar ray,
Illumed the shrouds and rainbow'd far the spray;
The smiling crew rose resolute and brave,
And the glad sails hung bounding o'er the wave.
Storms of wild Hatteras, suspend your roar,
Ye tumbling billows, cease to shake the shore;
Look thro the doubling clouds, thou lamp of day,
Teach the bold Argonauts their chartless way;
Your viewless capes, broad Chesapeak, unfold
And show your promised Colchis fleeced with gold.
No plundering squadron your new Jason brings;
No pirate demigods nor hordes of kings
From shore to shore a faithless miscreant steers
To steal a maid and leave a sire in tears.

But yon wise chief conducts with careful ken
The queen of colonies, the best of men,
To wake to fruitful life your slumbering soil
And rear an empire with the hand of toil.
Your fond Medea too, whose dauntless breast
All danger braves to screen her hunted guest,
Shall quit her native tribe, but never share
The crimes and sufferings of the Colchian fair.
Blest Pocahontas, fear no lurking guile;
Thy hero's love shall well reward thy smile.
Ah, sooth the wanderer in his desperate plight,
Hide him by day and calm his cares by night;
Tho savage nations with thy vengeful sire
Pursue their victim with unceasing ire,
And tho their threats thy startled ear assail,
Let virtue's voice o'er filial fears prevail.
Fly with the faithful youth, his steps to guide,
Pierce the known thicket, breast the fordless tide,
Illude the scout, avoid the ambusht line
And lead him safely to his friends and thine;
For thine shall be his friends, his heart, his name;
His camp shall shout, his nation boast thy fame.

But now the bay unfolds a passage wide
And leads the squadron up the freshening tide;
Where Pohatan spreads deep her sylvan soil,
And grassy lawns allure the steps of toil.
Here, lodged in peace, they tread the welcome land,
An instant harvest waves beneath their hand,
Spontaneous fruits their easy cares beguile,
And opening fields in living culture smile.
With joy Columbus view'd; when thus his voice:
Ye grove-clad shores, ye generous hosts rejoice;
Exchange your benefits, your gifts combine;
What nature fashions, let her sons refine.
Be thou, my seer, the people's guardian friend,
Protect their virtues and their lives defend;
May wealth and wisdom with their arts unfold,
Yet save, oh save them from the thirst of gold.
Let the poor guardless natives never feel
The flamen's fraud, the soldier's fateful steel;
But learn the blessings that alone attend
On civil rights where social virtues blend,
In these brave leaders find a welcome guide,
And rear their fanes and empires by their side.

Smile, great Hesperia, smile; the star of morn
Illumes thy heavens and bids thy day be born;
Thy opening forests show the work begun,
Thy plains unshaded drink a purer sun;
Yield now thy bounties, load the laboring main,
Give birth to nations and begin thy reign.

The Hero spoke; when thus the Saint rejoin'd,
Approved his joy and feasted still his mind:
Well may thy voice, with patriarch pride elate,
Burst forth triumphant at a scene so great.
Here springs indeed the day, since time began,
The brightest, broadest, happiest morn of man.
In these prime settlements thy raptures trace
The germ, the genius of a sapient race,
Predestined here to methodize and mold
New codes of empire to reform the old.

A work so vast a second world required,
By oceans bourn'd, from elder states retired;
Where, uncontaminated, unconfined,
Free contemplation might expand the mind,
To form, fix, prove the well adjusted plan
And base and build the commonwealth of man.

This arm, that leads the stellar host of even,
That stretcht o'er yon rude ridge the western heaven,
That heal'd the wounded earth when from her side
The moon burst forth and left the South Sea tide,
That calm'd these elements and taught them where
To mold their mass and rib the crusted sphere,
Line the closed continent with wrecks of life
And recommence their generating strife,
That rear'd the mountain, spread the subject plain,
Led the long stream and roll'd the billowy main,
Stole from retiring tides the growing strand,
Heaved the green banks, the shadowy inlets plann'd,
Strow'd the wild fruitage, gave the beast his place
And form'd the region for thy filial race,—
This arm prepared their future seats of state,
Design'd their limits and prescribed their date.

When first the staggering globe its breach repair'd,
And this bold hemisphere its shoulders rear'd,
Back to those heights, whose hovering vapor shrouds
My rock-raised world in Alleganian clouds,
The Atlantic waste its coral kingdom spread,
And scaly nations here their gambols led;

Till by degrees, thro following tracts of time,
From laboring ocean rose the sedgy clime,
As from unloaded waves, the rising sand
Swell'd into light and gently drew to land.
For, moved by tradewinds o'er the flaming zone,
The waves roll westward with the constant sun,
Meet my firm isthmus, scoop that gulfy bed,
Wheel to the north and here their current spread.
Those ravaged banks, that move beneath their force,
Borne on the tide and lost along their course,
Create the shore, consolidate the soil
And hither lead the enlighten'd steps of toil.
Think not the lust of gold shall here annoy,
Enslave the nation and its nerve destroy.
No useless mine these northern hills enclose,
No ruby ripens and no diamond glows;
But richer stores and rocks of useful mold
Repay in wealth the penury of gold.
Freedom's unconquer'd race with healthy toil
Shall lop the grove and warm the furrow'd soil,
From iron ridges break the rugged ore
And plant with men the man-ennobling shore;

Sails, villas, towers and temples round them heave,
Shine o'er the realms and light the distant wave.
Nor think the native tribes shall rue the day
That leads our heroes o'er the watery way;
A cause like theirs no mean device can mar,
Nor bigot rage nor sacerdotal war.
From eastern tyrants driven, resolved and brave,
To build new states or seek a distant grave,
Our sons shall try a new colonial plan,
To tame the soil, but spare their kindred man.
Thro Europe's wilds when feudal nations spread,
The pride of conquest every legion led.
Each fur-clad chief, by servile crowds adored,
O'er conquer'd realms assumed the name of lord,
Built the proud castle, ranged the savage wood
Fired his grim host to frequent fields of blood,
With new made honors lured his subject bands,
Price of their lives and purchase of their lands;
For names and titles bade the world resign
Their faith, their freedom and their rights divine.
Contending baronies their terrors spread,
And slavery follow'd where the standard led;

Till, little tyrants by the great o'erthrown,
The spoils of nobles build the regal crown;
Wealth, wisdom, virtue, every claim of man
Unguarded fall to consummate the plan.
Ambitious cares, that nature never gave,
Torment alike the monarch and the slave,
Thro all degrees in gradual pomp ascend,
Honor the name, but tyranny the end.
Far different honors here the heart shall claim,
Sublimer objects, deeds of happier fame;
A new creation waits the western shore,
And moral triumphs o'er monarchic power.
Thy freeborn sons, with genius unconfined,
Nor sloth can slacken nor a tyrant bind;
With self-wrought fame and worth internal blest
No venal star shall brighten on their breast,
Nor king-created name nor courtly art
Damp the bold thought or desiccate the heart.
Above all fraud, beyond all titles great,
Truth in their voice and sceptres at their feet,
Like sires of unborn states they move sublime,
Look empires thro and span the breadth of time,

Hold o'er the world, that men may choose from far,
The palm of peace or scourge of barbarous war;
Till their example every nation charms,
Commands its friendship and its rage disarms.
Here social man a second birth shall find,
And a new range of reason lift his mind,
Feed his strong intellect with purer light,
A nobler sense of duty and of right,
The sense of liberty; whose holy fire
His life shall temper and his laws inspire,
Purge from all shades the world-embracing scope
That prompts his genius and expands his hope.
When first his form arose erect on earth,
Parturient nature hail'd the wondrous birth,
With fairest limbs and finest fibres wrought
And framed for vast and various toils of thought.
To aid his promised powers with loftier flight
And stretch his views beyond corporeal sight,
Prometheus came and from the floods of day
Sunn'd his clear soul with heaven's internal ray,
The expanding spark divine, that round him springs
And leads and lights him thro the immense of things,

Probes the dense earth, explores the soundless main,
Remolds their mass thro all its threefold reign,
O'er great, o'er small extends his physic laws,
Impalms the empyrean or dissects a gaz,
Weighs the vast orbs of heaven, bestrides the sky,
Walks on the windows of an insect's eye;
Turns then to self, more curious still to trace
The whirls of passion that involve the race,
That cloud with mist the visual lamp of God
And plunge the poniard in fraternal blood.
Here fails his light. The proud Titanian ray
O'er physic nature sheds indeed its day;
Yet leaves the moral in chaotic jars,
The spoil of violence, the sport of wars,
Presents contrasted parts of one great plan,
Earth, heaven subdued, but man at swords with man;
His wars, his errors into science grown,
And the great cause of all his ills unknown.

But when he steps on these regenerate shores,
His mind unfolding for superior powers,
Freedom, his new Prometheus, here shall rise,
Light her new torch in my refulgent skies,

Touch with a stronger life his opening soul,
Of moral systems fix the central goal,
Her own resplendent essence. Thence expand
The rays of reason that illume the land;
Thence equal rights proceed and equal laws,
Thence holy Justice all her reverence draws;
Truth with untarnisht beam descending thence
Strikes every eye and quickens every sense,
Bids bright Instruction spread her ample page
To drive dark dogmas from the inquiring age,
Ope the true treasures of the earth and skies
And teach the student where his object lies.
  Sun of the moral world! effulgent source
Of man's best wisdom and his steadiest force,
Soul-searching Freedom! here assume thy stand
And radiate hence to every distant land;
Point out and prove how all the scenes of strife,
The shock of states, the impassion'd broils of life,
Spring from unequal sway; and how they fly
Before the splendor of thy peaceful eye;
Unfold at last the genuine social plan,
The mind's full scope, the dignity of man,

Bold nature bursting thro her long disguise
And nations daring to be just and wise.
  Yes! righteous Freedom, heaven and earth and sea
Yield or withhold their various gifts for thee;
Protected Industry beneath thy reign
Leads all the virtues in her filial train;
Courageous Probity with brow serene
And temperance calm presents her placid mien;
Contentment, Moderation, Labor, Art
Mold the new man and humanize his heart;
To public plenty private ease dilates,
Domestic peace to harmony of states.
Protected Industry, careering far,
Detects the cause and cures the rage of war
And sweeps with forceful arm to their last graves
Kings from the earth and pirates from the waves.
  But slow proceeds the work. Long toils, my son,
Must base the fabric of so vast a throne;
Where Freedom founds her everlasting reign,
And earth's whole empires form the fair domain.
That great coloniarch, whose exalted soul
Pervades all scenes that future years unrol,

Must yield the palm and at a courtier's shrine
His plans relinquish and his life resign;
His life that brightens, as his death shall stain
The fair, foul annals of his master's reign.
That feeble band, the lonely wilds who tread,
Their sire, their genius in their Raleigh dead,
Shall pine and perish in the savage gloom
Or mount the wave and seek their ancient home.
Others in vain the generous task pursue,
The dangers tempt and all the strife renew;
While kings and ministers obstruct (32) the plan,
Unfaithful guardians of the weal of man.
At last brave Delaware with his blithe host
Sails in full triumph to the well known coast,
Aids with a liberal hand the patriot cause,
Reforms their policy, designs their laws;
Till o'er Virginia's plains they spread their sway
And push their hamlets tow'rd the setting day.
He comes, my Delaware! how mild and bland
My zephyrs greet him from the long-sought land!
From fluvial glades that thro my cantons run,
From those rich mounds that mask the falling sun.

Borne up my Chesapeak, as first he hails
The flowery banks that scent his slackening sails,
Descending twilight mellows down the gleam
That spreads far forward on the broad blue stream;
The moonbeam dancing, as the pendants glide,
Silvers with trembling tints the ripply tide;
The sand-sown beach, the rocky bluff repays
The faint effulgence with their amber'd rays;
O'er greenwood glens a browner lustre flies
And bright-hair'd hills walk shadowy round the skies.
  Profound solicitude and strong delight
Absorb the chief as thro the waste of night
He walks the lonely deck and skirts the lands
That wait their nations from his guiding hands.
Tall thro the tide the river gods by turns
Rise round the bark and blend their social urns;
Majestic brotherhood! each feels the power
To feed an empire from his future store,
They stand stupendous, flooding full the bay,
And pointing each thro different climes the way.
  Resplendent o'er the rest, the regent god
Patomac towers and sways the swelling flood;

Vines clothe his arms, wild fruits o'erfill his horn,
Wreaths of green maiz his reverend brows adorn,
His silver beard reflects the lunar day,
And round his loins the scaly nations play.
The breeze falls calm, the sails in silence rest,
While thus his greetings cheer the stranger guest:
Blest be the bark that seized the promised hour
To waft thee welcome to this friendly shore.
Long have we learnt the fame that here awaits
The future sires of our unplanted states;
We all salute thee with our mingling tides,
Our high-fenced havens and our fruitful sides.
The hundred realms our myriad fountains drain
Shall lose their limits in the vast domain;
But my bold banks with proud impatience wait
The palm of glory in a work so great;
On me thy sons their central seat shall raise
And crown my labors with distinguisht praise.
For this, from rock-ribb'd lakes I forced my birth
And climb'd and sunder'd many a mound of earth,
Rent the huge hills that yonder heave on high
And with their tenfold ridges rake the sky,

Removed whole mountains in my headlong way,
Strow'd a strong soil around this branching bay,
Scoop'd wide his basins to the distant main
And hung with headlands every marsh they drain.
Haste then, my heroes, tempt the fearless toil,
Enrich your nations with the nurturing spoil;
O'er my vast vales let yellow harvests wave,
Quay the calm ports and dike the lawns I lave,
Win from the waters every stagnant fen,
Where truant rills escape my conscious ken;
And break those remnant rocks that still impede
My current crowding thro the gaps I made.
So shall your barks pursue my branching bed,
Slope after slope, to every fountain's head,
Seat your contiguous towns on all my shores
And charge my channel with their seaward stores.
Freedom and peace shall well reward your care,
My guardian mounds protect the friendly pair;
Or if delirious war shall dare draw nigh
And eastern storms o'ercast the western sky,
My soil shall rear the chief to guide your host
And drive the demon cringing from the coast;

You verdant hill his sylvan seat shall claim
And grow immortal from his deathless fame.
  Then shall your federal towers my bank adorn
And hail with me the great millennial morn
That gilds your capitol. Thence earth shall draw
Her first clear codes of liberty and law;
There public right a settled form shall find,
Truth trim her lamp to lighten humankind,
Old Afric's sons their shameful fetters cast,
Our wild Hesperians humanize at last,
All men participate, all time expand
The source of good my liberal sages plann'd.
  This said, he plunges in the sacred flood;
That closes calm and lulls the cradled god.
Exulting at his words, the gallant crew
Brace the broad canvas and their course pursue:
For now the breathing airs, from ocean born,
Breeze up the bay and lead the lively morn
That lights them to their port. Tis here they join
Their bold precursors in the work divine;
And here their followers, yet a numerous train,
Wind o'er the wave and swell the new domain.

For impious Laud on England's wasted shore
Renews the flames that Mary fed before;
Contristed sects his sullen fury fly
To seek new seats beneath a safer sky;
Where faith and freedom yield a forceful charm,
And toils and dangers every bosom warm.
  Amid the tried unconquerable train,
Whom tyrants press and seas oppose in vain,
See Plymouth colons stretch their standards o'er,
Face the dark wildmen and the wintry shore;
See virtuous Baltimore ascend the wave,
See peaceful Penn its unknown terrors brave;
Swedes, Belgians, Gauls their various flags display,
Full pinions crowding on the watery way;
All from their different ports, their sails unfurl'd,
Point their glad streamers to the western world.

THE

COLUMBIAD.

BOOK V.

Columbus hail'd them with a father's smile,
Fruit of his cares and children of his toil:
While still his eyes thro tears of joy descried
Their course adventurous on the distant tide.
Thus when o'er deluged earth her Numen stood,
The tost ark bounding on the shoreless flood,
The sacred treasure fixt his guardian view,
While climes unnoticed in the wave withdrew.
The hero saw them reach the rising strand,
Leap from their ships and share the joyous land;
Receding forests yield the laborers room,
And opening wilds with fields and gardens bloom.

Fill'd with the glance ecstatic, all his soul
Now seems unbounded with the scene to roll,
And now impatient, with retorted eye,
Perceives his station in another sky:
Waft me, indulgent Angel, waft me o'er
With those blest heroes to the happy shore;
There let me live and die. But all appears
A fleeting vision! these are future years.
Yet grant the illusion still may nearer spread
And my glad steps may seem their walks to tread;
While Europe wrapt in momentary night
Shall rise no more to intercept the sight.
  Columbus thus; when Hesper's potent hand
Moves brightening o'er the visionary land;
The height that bore them still sublimer grew
And earth's whole circuit settled from their view.
A dusky deep serene as breathless even
Seem'd vaulting downward like another heaven;
The sun, rejoicing on his western way,
Stampt his fair image in the inverted day:
When now Hesperia's coast arose more nigh
And life and action fill'd the dancing eye.

Between the gulfs, where Laurence drains the world
And where Floridia's furthest floods are curl'd,
Where midlands broad their swelling mountains heave
And slope their champaigns to the Atlantic wave,
The sandy streambank and the woodgreen plain
Raise into sight the new made seats of man.
The placid ports that break the seaborn gales
Rear their tall masts and stretch aloft their sails;
Full harvests wave, the groves with fruitage bend,
Gay villas smile, defensive towers ascend;
All the rich works of art their charms display
To court the planter and his cares repay:
Till war invades; when soon the dales disclose
Their meadows path'd with files of savage foes;
High tufted quills their painted foreheads press,
Dark spoils of beasts their shaggy shoulders dress,
The bow bent forward for the combat strung,
The ax, the quiver on the girdle hung;
The deep discordant yells convulse the air,
And earth resounds the war whoop's hideous blare.
The patriarch lookt; and every darken'd height
Pours down the swarthy nations to the fight.

Where Kennebec's high source forsakes the sky,
Where long Champlain's yet unkeel'd waters lie,
Where Hudson crowds his hill-dissundering tide,
Where Kaatskill heights the starry vault divide,
Where the dim Alleganies range sublime
And give their streams to every neighboring clime,
The swarms descended like an evening shade,
And wolves and vultures follow'd where they spread.
Thus when a storm on eastern pinions driven
Meets the firm Andes in the midst of heaven,
The clouds convulse, the torrents pour amain
And the black waters sweep the subject plain.
  Thro harvest fields the bloody myriads tread,
Sack the lone village, strow the streets with dead;
The flames in spiry volumes round them rise,
And shrieks and shouts redoubling rend the skies.
Fair babes and matrons in their domes expire
Or bursting frantic thro the folding fire
They scream, fly, fall; promiscuous rave along
The yelling victors and the driven throng;
The streams run purple; all the peopled shore
Is wrapt in flames and trod with steps of gore.

Till colons, gathering from the shorelands far,
Stretch their new standards and oppose the war,
With muskets match the many-shafted bow,
With loud artillery stun the astonisht foe.
When like a broken wave the barbarous train
Lead back the flight and scatter from the plain,
Slay their weak captives, drop their shafts in haste,
Forget their spoils and scour the trackless waste;
From wood to wood in wild confusion hurl'd
They hurry o'er the hills far thro the savage world.
  Now move secure the cheerful works of peace,
New temples rise and fruitful fields increase.
Where Delaware's wide waves behold with pride
Penn's beauteous town ascending on their side,
The crossing streets in just allinement run,
The walls and pavements sparkle to the sun.
Like that famed city rose the checker'd plan,
Whose spacious towers Semiramis began;
Long ages finisht what her hand design'd.
The pride of kings and wonder of mankind.
  Newyork ascends o'er Hudson's seaward isles
And flings the sunbeams from her glittering tiles;

Albania, opening thro the distant wood,
Rolls her rich treasures on her parent flood;
Amid a thousand sails young Boston laves,
High looms majestic Newport o'er the waves,
Patapsco's bay contracts his yielding side,
As spreading Baltimore invades his tide;
Aspiring Richmond tops the bank of James,
And Charleston sways her two contending streams.
Thro each colonial realm, for wisdom great,
Elected sires assume the cares of state;
Nursed in equality, to freedom bred,
Firm is their step and strait the paths they tread;
Dispensing justice with paternal hand,
By laws of peace they rule the happy land;
While reason's page their statute codes unfold,
And rights and charters flame in figured gold.
All rights that Britons know they here transfuse,
Their sense invigorate and expand their views,
Dare every height of human soul to scan,
Find, fathom, scope the moral breadth of man,
Learn how his social powers may still dilate
And tone their tension to a stronger state.

Gaul's migrant sons explore the western day
Stretch over Canada their colon sway,
Plant sylvan Wabash with a watchful post,
O'er Missisippi spread a mantling host,
Bid Louisiana's lovely clime prepare
New arts to prove and infant states to rear;
While the bright lakes, that wide behind them spread,
Unfold their channels to the paths of trade,
Ohio's waves their destined honors claim
And smile as conscious of approaching fame.
But Gallic planters still their trammels wear,
Their feudal genius still attends them here;
Dependent feelings for a distant throne
Gyve the crampt soul that fears to think alone,
Demand their rulers from the parent land,
Laws ready made and generals to command.
Judge, priest and pedagogue and all the slaves
Of foreign masters crowding o'er the waves
Spread thick the shades of vassalage and sloth,
Absorb their labors and prevent their growth,
Damp every thought that might their tyrants brave,
And keep the vast domain a desert and a grave.

Too soon the mother states with jealous fear
Transport their feuds and homebred quarrels here.
Now Gallia's war-built barks ascend in sight,
White flags unfold and armies robed in white,
On all the frontier streams their forts prepare
And coop our cantons with surrounding war.
Quebec, as proud she rears her rocky seat,
Feeds their full camp and shades their anchor'd fleet;
Oswego's rampart frowns athwart his flood,
And wild Ontario swells beneath his load.
And now an equal host from Albion's strand
Arrives to aid her young colonial band.
They join their force and tow'rd the falling day
Impetuous Braddock leads their hasty way;
O'er Allegany heights, like streams of fire,
The red flags wave and glittering arms aspire
To meet the savage hordes, who there advance
Their skulking files to join the arms of France.
Where, old as earth, yet still unstain'd with blood,
Monongahela roll'd his careless flood,
Flankt with his mantling groves the fountful hills,
Drain'd the vast region thro his thousand rills,

Lured o'er his lawns the buffle herds, and spread
For all his fowls his piscatory glade;
But now perceives, with hostile flag unfurl'd,
A Gallic fortress awe the western world;
There Braddock bends his march; the troops within
Behold their danger and the fire begin.
Forth bursting from the gates they rush amain,
Front, flank and charge the fast approaching train;
The batteries blaze, the leaden vollies pour,
The vales, the streams, the solid mountains roar;
Clouds of convolving smoke the welkin spread,
The champaign shrouding in sulphureous shade.
Lost in the rocking thunder's loud career,
No shouts nor groans invade the Patriarch's ear,
Nor valorous feats are seen nor flight nor fall,
But one broad burst of darkness buries all.
Till chased by rising winds the smoke withdrew,
And the wide slaughter open'd on his view.
He saw the British leader borne afar
In dust and gore beyond the wings of war;
And while delirious panic seized his host,
Their flags, their arms in wild confusion tost,

Bold in the midst a youthful warrior strode
And tower'd undaunted o'er the field of blood;
He checks the shameful rout, with vengeance burns,
And the pale Britons brighten where he turns.
So when thick vapors veil the nightly sky
The starry hosts in half seen lustre fly
Till phosphor rises o'er the twinkling crowd
And gives new splendor thro his parting cloud.
  Swift on a fiery steed the stripling rose,
Form'd the light files to pierce the line of foes;
Then waved his gleamy sword that flasht the day
And thro the Gallic legions hew'd his way:
His troops press forward like a loose-broke flood,
Sweep ranks away and smear their paths in blood;
The hovering foes pursue the combat far
And shower their balls along the flying war;
When the new leader turns his single force,
Points the flight forward, speeds his backward course;
The French recoiling half their victory yield,
And the glad Britons quit the fatal field.
  These deathful deeds as great Columbus eyed,
With anxious tone he thus addrest the Guide:

Why combat here these transatlantic bands
And strow their corses thro thy pathless lands?
Can Europe's realms, the seat of endless strife,
Afford no trophies for the waste of life?
Can monarchs there no proud applauses gain,
No living laurel for their people slain?
Nor Belgia's plains, so fertile made with gore,
Hide heroes' bones nor feast the vultures more?
Will Rhine no longer cleanse the crimson stain,
Nor Danube bear their bodies to the main,
That infant empires here the shock must feel,
And these pure streams with foreign carnage swell?
But who that chief? his name, his nation say,
Whose lifeblood seems his follies to repay;
And who the youth that from the combat lost
Springs up and saves the remnant of his host?
  The power replied: Each age successive brings
Their varying views to earth's contentious kings;
Here roll the years when Albion's parent hand,
In aid of thy brave children, guards the land;
That growing states their veteran force may train,
A nobler prize in later fields to gain;

In fields where Albion's self shall turn their foe,
Spread broader sails and aim a deadlier blow,
Recross in evil hour the astonisht wave,
Her own brave sons to ravage and enslave.
But here she combats with the powers of Gaul;
Here her bold Braddock finds his destined fall;
Thy Washington in that young martial frame
From yon lost field begins a life of fame.
Tis he, in future straits with loftier stride,
The colon states to sovereign rule shall guide;
When, prest by wrongs, their own full force they find,
To wield the sword for man and bulwark humankind.
The Seraph spoke; when thro the purpled air
The northern armies spread the flames of war.
Swift o'er the lake to Crownpoint's fortful strand
Rash Abercrombie leads his headlong band
To fierce unequal fight; the batteries roar,
Shield the strong foes and rake the banner'd shore;
Britannia's sons again the contest yield;
Again proud Gaul triumphant sweeps the field.
But Amherst quick renews the raging toil
And drives wide hosting o'er Acadia's isle;

Young Wolfe beside him points the lifted lance,
The boast of Britain and the scourge of France.
The tide of victory here the heroes turn
And Gallic navies in their harbors burn;
High flame the ships, the billows swell with gore,
And the red standard shades the conquer'd shore.
Wolfe, now detacht and bent on bolder deeds,
A sail-borne host up sealike Laurence leads,
Stems the long lessening tide; till Abraham's height
And famed Quebec rise frowning into sight,
Swift bounding on the bank, the foe they claim,
Climb the tall mountain, like a rolling flame,
Push wide their wings high bannering bright the air
And move to fight, as comets cope in war.
The smoke falls folding thro the downward sky
And shrouds the mountain from the patriarch's eye;
While on the towering top, in glare of day,
The flashing swords in fiery arches play.
As on a side-seen storm, adistance driven,
The flames fork round the semivault of heaven,
Thick thunders roll, descending torrents flow,
Dash down the clouds and whelm the hills below;

Or as on plains of light when Michael strove,
The swords of cherubim to combat move,
Ten thousand fiery forms together fray
And flash new lightning on empyreal day.
Long raged promiscuous combat, half conceal'd,
When sudden parle suspended all the field;
Then roar the shouts, the smoke forsakes the plain,
And the huge hill is topt with heaps of slain.
Stretcht high in air Britannia's standard waved
And good Columbus hail'd his country saved;
While calm and silent, where the ranks retire,
He saw brave Wolfe in victory's arms expire.
So the pale moon, when morning beams arise,
Veils her lone visage in her midway skies;
She needs no longer drive the shades away,
Nor waits to view the glories of the day.
Again the towns aspire; the cultured field
And crowded mart their copious treasures yield;
Back to his plow the colon soldier moves,
And songs of triumph fill the warbling groves,
The conscious flocks, returning joys that share.
Spread thro the grassland o'er the walks of war;

Streams freed of gore their crystal course regain,
Serener sunbeams gild the tentless plain;
A general jubilee o'er earth and heaven
Leads the gay morn and lights the lambent even.
  Rejoicing, confident of long repose,
(Their friends triumphant, far retired their foes)
The British colonies now feel their sway
Span the whole north and crowd the western day.
Acadia, Canada, earth's total side,
From Slave's long lake to Pensacola's tide,
Enrich their soils for them; and here unfold
A range of highest hope, a promised age of gold.
  But soon from eastern seas dark vapors rise,
Sweep the vast Occident and shroud the skies,
Snatch all the vision from the Hero's sight
And wrap the coast in sudden shades of night.
He turn'd and sorrowful besought the Power:
Why sinks the scene? or must I view no more?
Must here the fame of that young world descend?
Shall our brave children find so quick their end?
Where then the promised grace? "Thou soon shalt see
That half mankind shall owe their home to thee."

The Saint replied: Ere long, beneath thy view
The scene shall brighten and thy joys renew.
Here march the troublous years when goaded sore
Thy sons shall rise to change the ruling power;
When Albion's prince, who sways the happy land,
To lawless rule extends his tyrant hand.
To bind in slavery's bands the peaceful host,
Their rights unguarded and their charters lost.
Now raise thine eye; from this delusive claim
What nations leap to life, what deeds adorn their fame!
Columbus look'd; and still around them spread
From south to north the immeasurable shade;
At last the central darkness burst away,
And rising regions open'd on the day,
Once more bright Delaware's commercial stream
And Penn's throng'd city cast a cheerful gleam;
The dome of state, as conscious of his eye,
Now seem'd to silver in a loftier sky,
Unfolding fair its gates; when lo, within
The assembled states in solemn Congress shine.
The sires elect from every province came,
Where wide Columbia bore the British name,

Where Freedom's sons their highborn lineage (33) trace,
And homebred bravery still exalts the race:
Her sons who plant each various vast domain
That Chesapeak's uncounted currents drain;
The race who Roanoke's clear stream bestride,
Who fell the pine on Apalachia's side,
To Albemarle's wide wave who trust their store,
Who dike proud Pamlico's unstable shore,
Whose groaning barks o'erload the long Santee,
Wind thro the realms and labor to the sea,
(Their cumbrous cargoes to the sail consign'd Seek distant worlds and feed and clothe mankind;)
The race whose rice fields suck Savanna's urn,
Whose verdant vines Oconee's bank adorn;
Who freight the Delaware with golden grain,
Who tame their steeds on Monmouth's flowery plain,
From huge Toconnok hills who drag their ore
And sledge their corn to Hudson's quay-built shore,
Who keel Connecticut's long meadowy tide,
With patient plow his fallow plains divide,
Spread their white flocks o'er Narraganset's vale
Or chase to each chill pole the monstrous whale;

Whose venturous prows have borne their fame afar,
Tamed all the seas and steer'd by every star,
Dispensed to earth's whole habitants their store
And with their biting flukes have harrow'd every shore.
The virtuous delegates behold with pain
The hostile Britons hovering o'er the main,
Lament the strife that bids two worlds engage
And blot their annals with fraternal rage;
Two worlds in one broad state, whose bounds bestride,
Like heaven's blue arch, the vast Atlantic tide,
By language, laws and liberty combined,
Great nurse of thought, example to mankind.
Columbia rears her warning voice in vain,
Brothers to brothers call across the main;
Britannia's patriots lend a listening ear,
But kings and courtiers push their mad career;
Dissension raves, the sheathless falchions glare,
And earth and ocean tremble at the war.
Thus with stern brow, as worn by cares of state,
His bosom big with dark unfolding fate,
High o'er his lance the sacred Eagle spread,
And earth's whole crown still resting on his head,

Rome's hoary Genius rose and mournful stood
On roaring Rubicon's forbidden flood,
When Cesar's ensigns swept the Alpine air,
Led their long legions from the Gallic war,
Paused on the opposing bank with wings unfurl'd,
And waved portentous o'er the shuddering world.
The god, with outstretcht arm and awful look,
Call'd the proud victor and prophetic spoke:
Arrest, my son, thy parricidious hate,
Pass not the stream nor stab my filial state,
Stab not thyself, thy friends, thy total kind
And worlds and ages in one state combined.
The chief regardless of the warning god
Rein'd his rude steed and headlong past the flood,
Cried, farewel peace! took Fortune for his guide
And o'er his country pour'd the slaughtering tide.
  High on the foremost seat in living light
Resplendent Randolph caught the world's full sight.
He opes the cause and points in prospect far
Thro all the toils that wait impending war:
But, reverend sage! thy race must soon be o'er
To lend thy lustre and to shine no more.

So the mild morning star from shades of even
Leads up the dawn and lights the front of heaven,
Points to the waking world the sun's broad way,
Then veils his own and vaults above the day.
And see bright Washington behind thee rise,
Thy following sun to gild our morning skies,
O'er shadowy climes to pour enlivening flame,
The charms of freedom and the fire of fame.
For him the patriot bay beheld with pride
The hero's laurel springing by its side;
His sword still sleeping rested on his thigh,
On Britain still he cast a filial eye;
But sovereign fortitude his visage bore,
To meet her legions on the invaded shore.
  Sage Franklin next arose with cheerful mien
And smiled unruffled o'er the solemn scene;
His locks of age a various wreath embraced,
Palm of all arts that e'er a mortal graced;
Beneath him lay the sceptre kings had borne
And the tame thunder (34) from the tempest torn.
  Wythe, Mason, Pendleton with Henry join'd,
Rush, Rodney, Langdon, friends of humankind,

Persuasive Dickinson the farmer's boast,
Recording Thomson pride of all the host,
Nash, Jay, the Livingstons, in council great,
Rutledge and Laurens held the rolls of fate,
O'er wide creation turn'd their ardent eyes
And bade the opprest to selfexistence rise;
All powers of state, in their extended plan,
Spring from consent to shield the rights of man.
Undaunted Wolcott urged the holy cause,
With steady hand the solemn scene he draws;
Stern thoughtful temperance with his ardor join'd,
Nor kings nor worlds could warp his stedfast mind.
With graceful ease but energetic tones
And eloquence that shook a thousand thrones,
Majestic Hosmer stood; the expanding soul
Darts from his eyebeams while his accents roll.
But lo, the shaft of death untimely flew
And fell'd the patriot from the Hero's view;
Wrapt in the funeral shroud he sees descend
The guide of nations and the Muse's friend.
Columbus dropt a tear; while Hesper's eye
Traced the freed spirit mounting thro the sky.

Each generous Adams, freedom's favorite pair,
And Hancock rose the tyrant's rage to dare,
Groupt with firm Jefferson, her steadiest hope,
Of modest mien but vast unclouded scope.
Like four strong pillars of her state they stand,
They clear from doubt her brave but wavering band;
Colonial charters in their hands they bore
And lawless acts of ministerial power.
Some injured right in every page appears,
A king in terrors and a land in tears;
From all his guileful plots the veil they drew,
With eye retortive lookt creation thro,
Traced moral nature thro her total plan,
Markt all the steps of liberty and man;
Crowds rose to reason while their accents rung,
And INDEPENDENCE thunder'd from their tongue.
Columbus turn'd; when rolling to the shore
Swells o'er the seas an undulating roar;
Slow, dark, portentous, as the meteors sweep
And curtain black the illimitable deep,
High stalks from surge to surge a demon Form
That howls thro heaven and breathes a billowing storm.

His head is hung with clouds; his giant hand
Flings a blue flame far flickering to the land;
His blood-stain'd limbs drip carnage as he strides
And taint with gory grume the staggering tides;
Like two red suns his quivering eyeballs glare,
Engines of death behind him load the air,
Pikes, muskets, mortars, guns and globes of fire
And lighted bombs that fusing trails expire.
Percht on his helmet, two twin sisters rode,
The favorite offspring of the murderous god,
Famine and Pestilence; whom whilom bore
His wife, grim Discord, on Trinacria's shore;
When first their cyclop sons, from Etna's forge,
Fill'd his foul magazine, the mount's deep gorge:
Then earth convulsive groan'd, high shriekt the air,
And hell in gratulation call'd him War.

Behind the fiend, swift hovering for the coast,
Hangs o'er the wave Britannia's sail-wing'd host;
They crowd the main, they spread their sheets abroad
From the wide Laurence to the Georgian flood,
Point their black batteries to the peopled shore,
And spouting flames commence the hideous roar.

Where fortless Falmouth, looking o'er her bay,
In terror saw the approaching thunders play,
The fire begins; the shells o'er-arching fly
And shoot a thousand rainbows thro the sky;
On Charlestown spires, on Bedford roofs they light,
Groton and Fairfield kindle from the flight,
Norwalk expands the blaze; o'er Reading hills
High flaming Danbury the welkin fills;
Esopus burns, Newyork's delightful fanes
And sea-nursed Norfolk light the neighboring plains.
From realm to realm the smoky volumes bend,
Reach round the bays and up the streams extend;
Deep o'er the concave heavy wreaths are roll'd,
And midland towns and distant groves infold.
Thro solid curls of smoke the bursting fires
Climb in tall pyramids above the spires,
Concentring all the winds; whose forces, driven
With equal rage from every point of heaven,
Whirl into conflict, round the scantling pour
The twisting flames and thro the rafters roar,
Suck up the cinders, send them sailing far,
To warn the nations of the raging war,

Bend high the blazing vortex, swell'd and curl'd,
Careering, brightening o'er the lustred world,
Absorb the reddening clouds that round them run,
Lick the pale stars and mock their absent sun:
Seas catch the splendor, kindling skies resound,
And falling structures shake the smoldering ground.
  Crowds of wild fugitives, with frantic tread,
Flit thro the flames that pierce the midnight shade,
Back on the burning domes revert their eyes,
Where some lost friend, some perisht infant lies,
Their maim'd, their sick, their age-enfeebled sires
Have sunk sad victims to the sateless fires;
They greet with one last look their tottering walls,
See the blaze thicken as the ruin falls,
Then o'er the country train their dumb despair
And far behind them leave the dancing glare;
Their own crusht roofs still lend a trembling light,
Point their long shadows and direct their flight.
Till wandering wide they seek some cottage door,
Ask the vile pittance due the vagrant poor;
Or faint and faltering on the devious road,
They sink at last and yield their mortal load.

But where the sheeted flames thro Charlestown roar,
And lashing waves hiss round the burning shore,
Thro the deep folding fires dread Bunker's height
Thunders o'er all and shows a field of fight.
Like nightly shadows thro a flaming grove,
To the dark fray the closing squadrons move;
They join, they break, they thicken thro the glare,
And blazing batteries burst along the war;
Now wrapt in reddening smoke, now dim in sight,
They rake the hill or wing the downward flight;
Here, wheel'd and wedged, Britannia's veterans turn
And the long lightnings from their muskets burn;
There scattering strive the thin colonial train,
Whose broken platoons still the field maintain;
Till Britain's fresh battalions rise the height
And with increasing vollies give the fight.
When, choked with dust, discolor'd deep in gore
And gall'd on all sides from the ships and shore,
Hesperia's host moves off the field afar
And saves, by slow retreat, the sad remains of war.

There strides bold Putnam and from all the plains
Calls the tired troops, the tardy rear sustains,

And, mid the whizzing balls that skim the lowe,
Waves back his sword, defies the following foe.
In this prime prelude of the toil that waits
The nascent glories of his infant states,
Columbus mourn'd the slain. A numerous crowd,
Half of each host, had bought their fame with blood;
From the whole hill he saw the lifestream pour
And sloping pathways trod with tracks of gore.
Here, glorious Warren, thy cold earth was seen,
Here spring thy laurels in immortal green;
Dearest of chiefs that ever prest the plain,
In freedom's cause with early honors slain;
Still dear in death, as when before our sight
You graced the senate or you led the fight.
The grateful Muse shall tell the world your fame,
And unborn realms resound the deathless name.
Now from all plains, as settling smokes decay,
The banded freemen rise in open day;
Tall thro the lessening shadows, half conceal'd,
They throng and gather in a central field;
In unskill'd ranks but ardent soul they stand,
Claim quick the foe and eager strife demand.

In front firm Washington superior shone,
His eye directed to the half-seen sun;
As thro the cloud the bursting splendors glow
And light the passage to the distant foe.
His waving steel returns the living day
And points, thro unfought fields, the warrior's way;
His valorous deeds to be confined no more,
Monongahela, to thy desert shore.
Matured with years, with nobler glory warm,
Fate in his eye and empire on his arm,
He feels his sword the strength of nations wield
And moves before them with a broader shield.
Greene rose beside him emulous in arms,
His genius brightening as the danger warms,
In counsel great, in every science skill'd,
Pride of the camp and terror of the field.
With eager look, conspicuous o'er the crowd
And port majestic, brave Montgomery strode,
Bared his tried blade, with honor's call elate,
Claim'd the first field and hasten'd to his fate.
Lincoln, with force unfolding as he rose,
Scoped the whole war and measured well the foes;

Calm, cautious, firm, for frugal counsels known,
Frugal of others' blood but liberal of his own,
Heath for impending toil his falchion draws
And fearless Wooster aids the sacred cause,
Mercer advanced an early death to prove,
Sinclair and Mifflin swift to combat move;
Here stood stern Putnam, scored with ancient scars,
The living records of his country's wars;
Wayne like a moving tower assumes his post,
Fires the whole field and is himself a host;
Undaunted Stirling, prompt to meet his foes,
And Gates and Sullivan for action rose;
Macdougal, Clinton, guardians of the state,
Stretch the nerved arm to pierce the depth of fate;
Marion with rapture seized the sword of fame,
Young Laurens graced a father's patriot name;
Moultrie and Sumter lead their banded powers,
Morgan in front of his bold riflers towers,
His host of keen-eyed marksmen skill'd to pour
Their slugs unerring from the twisted bore.
No sword, no bayonet they learn to wield,
They gall the flank, they skirt the battling field,

Cull out the distant foe in full horse speed,
Couch the long tube and eye the silver bead,
Turn as he turns, dismiss the whizzing lead
And lodge the death-ball in his heedless head.
So toil'd the huntsman Tell. His quivering dart,
Prest by the bended bowstring, fears to part,
Dreads the tremendous task, to graze but shun
The tender temples of his infant son;
As the loved youth (the tyrant's victim led)
Bears the poised apple tottering on his head,
The sullen father, with reverted eye,
Now marks the satrap, now the bright-hair'd boy;
His second shaft impatient lies, athirst
To mend the expected error of the first,
To pierce the monster, mid the insulted crowd,
And steep the pangs of nature in his blood.
Deep doubling to his breast, well poised and slow
Curve the strain'd horns of his indignant bow;
His left arm straitens as the dexter bends,
And his nerved knuckle with the gripe distends;
Soft slides the reed back with the stiff drawn strand,
Till the steel point has reacht his steady hand;

Then to his keen fixt eye the shank he brings,
Twangs the loud cord, the feather'd arrow sings,
Picks off the pippin from the smiling boy,
And Uri's rocks resound with shouts of joy.
Soon by an equal dart the tyrant bleeds,
The cantons league, the work of fate proceeds;
Till Austria's titled hordes with their own gore
Fat the fair fields they lorded long before;
On Gothard's height while Freedom first unfurl'd
Her infant banner o'er the modern world.

Bland, Moylan, Sheldon the long lines enforce
With light arm'd scouts, with solid squares of horse;
And Knox from his full park to battle brings
His brazen tubes, the last resort of kings. (35)
The long black rows in sullen silence wait,
Their grim jaws gaping, soon to utter fate;
When at his word the carbon clouds shall rise
And well aim'd thunders rock the shores and skies.

Two foreign youths had caught the splendent flame,
To fame's hard school the warm disciples came;
To learn sage Liberty's unlesson'd lore,
To brave the tempest on her war-beat shore,

Prometheus like to snatch a beam of day
And homeward bear the unscintillating ray,
To pour new life on Europe's languid horde,
Where millions crouch beneath one stupid lord.
Tho Austria's keiser and the Russian czar
To dungeons doom them and with fetters mar,
Fayette o'er Gaul's vast realm some light shall spread,
Brave Kosciusco rear Sarmatia's head;
From Garonne's bank to Duna's wintry skies
The morn shall move and slumbering nations rise.
And tho their despots quake with wild alarms
And lash and agonize the world to arms,
Whelm for awhile the untutor'd race in blood
And turn against themselves the raging flood;
Yet shall the undying dawn with silent pace
Reach over earth and every land embrace;
Till Europe's well taught sons the boon shall share
And bless the labors of the imprison'd air.
So Leda's twins from Colchis raped the fleece
And brought the treasure to their native Greece.
She hail'd her heroes from their finisht wars,
Assign'd their place amid the cluster'd stars,

Bade round the eternal sky their trophies flame
And charged the zodiac with their deathless fame.
—Here move the strangers, here in freedom's cause
His untried blade each stripling hero draws,
On the great chief their eyes in transport roll,
And war and Washington renerve the soul.
Steuben advanced in veteran armor drest,
For Prussian lore distinguisht o'er the rest,
The tactic lore; to this he bends his care
And here transplants the discipline of war.
Other brave chieftains of illustrious name
Rise into sight and equal honors claim;
But who can tell the dew drops of the morn
Or count the rays that in the diamond burn?
—Grieve not, my valiant friends; the faithful song
Shall soon redress the momentary wrong;
Your own bright swords have cleaved your course to fame
And all her hundred tongues recognise every claim.
Now the broad field as untaught warriors shade,
The sun's glad beam their shining arms display'd;
High waved great Washington his glittering steel,
Bade the long train in circling order wheel;

And, while the banner'd youths around him prest,
With voice revered he thus the ranks addrest:
Ye generous bands, behold the task to save,
Or yield whole nations to an instant grave.
See hosted myriads crowding to your shore,
Hear from all ports their vollied thunders roar;
From Boston heights their bloody standards play,
O'er long Champlain they lead their northern way,
Virginian banks behold their streamers glide,
And hostile navies load each southern tide.
Beneath their steps your towns in ashes lie,
Your inland empires feast their greedy eye;
Soon shall your fields to lordly parks be turn'd,
Your children butcher'd and your villas burn'd;
While following millions, thro the reign of time,
Who claim their birth in this indulgent clime,
Bend the weak knee, to servile toils consign'd,
And sloth and slavery still degrade mankind.
Rise then to war, to timely vengeance rise,
Ere the gray sire, the hapless infant dies;
Look thro the world, see endless years descend,
What realms what ages on your arms depend!

Reverse the fate, avenge the insulted sky,
Move to the work; we conquer or we die.
So spoke Columbia's chief; his guiding hand
Points out their march to every ardent band,
Assigns to each brave leader, as they claim,
His test of valor and his task of fame.
With his young host Montgomery first moves forth
To crush the vast invasion of the north;
O'er streams and lakes his flags far onward play,
Navies and forts surrendering mark their way;
Rocks fens and deserts thwart the paths they go,
And hills before them lose their crags in snow.
Loud Laurence, clogg'd with ice, indignant feels
Their sleet-clad oars, choked helms and crusted keels;
They buffet long his tides; when rise in sight
Quebec's dread walls and Wolfe's unclouded height.
Already there a few brave patriots stood,
Worn down with toil, by famine half subdued;
Untrencht before the town they dare oppose
Their fielded cohorts to the forted foes.
Ah gallant troop! deprived of half the praise
That deeds like yours in other times repays,

Since your prime chief (the favorite erst of fame)
Hath sunk so deep his hateful hideous name,
That every honest Muse with horror flings
The name unsounded from her sacred strings;
Else what high tones of rapture must have told
The first great action (36) of a chief so bold!
Twas his, twas yours, to brave unusual storms,
To tame rude nature in her drearest forms;
Foodless and guideless, thro that waste of earth,
You marcht long months; and, sore reduced by dearth,
Reacht the proud capital, too feeble far
To tempt unaided such a task of war;
Till now Montgomery's host with hopes elate
Joins your scant powers, to try the test of fate.
With skilful glance he views the fortress round,
Bristled with pikes, with dark artillery crown'd;
Resolves with naked steel to scale the towers
And snatch a realm from Britain's hostile powers.
Now drear december's boreal blasts arise,
A roaring hailstorm sweeps the shuddering skies,
Night with condensing horror mantles all
And trembling watch-lights glimmer from the wall.

From bombs o'erarching, fusing, bursting high,
The glare scarce wanders thro the loaded sky;
And in the louder shock of meteors drown'd
The accustom'd ear in vain expects the sound.
He points the assault, and thro the howling air
O'er rocky ramparts leads audacious war.
Swift rise the rapid files, the walls are red
With flashing flames that show the piles of dead;
Till back recoiling from the ranks of slain,
They leave their leader with a feeble train,
Begirt with foes within the sounding wall
Who thick beneath his single sabre fall.
But short the conflict; others hemm'd him round,
And brave Montgomery prest the gory ground.
A second Wolfe Columbus here beheld,
In youthful charms, a soul undaunted yield;
Forlorn, o'erpower'd, his hardy host remains
Stretcht by his side or led in captive chains.
Macpherson, Cheesman share their general's doom;
Meigs, Morgan, Dearborn, planning deeds to come,
Resign impatient prisoners; soon to wield
Their happier falchions in a broader field.

Triumphant to Newyork's ill forted post
Britannia turns her vast amphibious host,
That seas and storms obedient to her hand
Heave and discharge on every distant land;
Fleets, floating batteries shake Manhattan's shore,
And Hellgate rocks reverberate the roar.
Swift o'er the shuddering isles that line the bay
The red flags wave and battering engines play;
Howe leads aland the interminable train,
While his bold brother still bestorms the main,
Great Albion's double pride, both famed afar
On each vext element, each world of war,
Where British rapine follows peaceful toil
And murders nations, but to seize their spoil.
Wide sweep the veteran myriads o'er the strand,
Outnumbering thrice the raw colonial band;
Flatbush and Harlem sink beneath their fires,
Brave Stirling yields and Sullivan retires.
In vain sage Washington from hill to hill
Plays round his foes with more than Fabian skill,
Retreats, advances, lures them to his snare,
To balance numbers by the shifts of war,

For not their swords alone, but fell disease
Thins his chill camp and chokes the sedgy seas.
The baleful malady from Sirius sent
Floats in each breeze, impesting every tent,
Strikes the young soldier with the morning ray
And lays him lifeless ere the close of day,
Far from his father's house, his mother's care
And all the charities that nursed him there.
  Dampt is the native rage that first impell'd
The insulted colons to the battling field;
When first their high-soul'd sentiment of right
And full-vein'd vigor nerved their arm to fight.
For stript of health, benumb'd thy vital flood,
Thy muscles laxt and decomposed thy blood,
What is thy courage, man? a foodless flame,
A light unseen, a soul without a frame.
  Each day the decimated ranks forego
Their dying comrades to repulse the foe,
And each damp night along the slippery trench
Breathe at their post the suffocating stench;
They sink by hundreds on the vapory soil,
Till a new fight relieves their deadlier toil.

At last from fruitless combat, sore defeat,
To Croton hills they lead a long retreat;
Pale, curbed, exanimate, in dull despair.
Train the scant relics of the twofold war:
The sword, the pestilence press hard behind;
The body both assail, and one beats down the mind.

ARGUMENT.

British cruelty to American prisoners. Prison Ship. Retreat of Washington with the relics of his army, pursued by Howe. Washington recrossing the Delaware in the night, to surprise the British van, is opposed by uncommon obstacles. His success in this audacious enterprise lays the foundation of the American empire. A monument to be erected on the bank of the Delaware. Approach of Burgoyne, sailing up the St. Laurence with an army of Britons and various other nations. Indignant energy of the colonies, compared to that of Greece in opposing the invasion of Xerxes. Formation of an army of citizens under the command of Gates. Review of the American and British armies, and of the savage tribes who join the British standard. Battle of Saratoga. Story of Lucinda. Second battle, and capture of Burgoyne and his army.

COLUMBIAD.

BOOK VI.

But of all tales that war's black annals hold
The darkest, foulest still remains untold;
New modes of torture wait the shameful strife,
And Britain wantons in the waste of life.
  Cold-blooded Cruelty, first fiend of hell,
Ah think no more with savage hordes to dwell;
Quit the Caribean tribes who eat their slain,
Fly that grim gang, the Inquisitors of Spain,
Boast not thy deeds in Moloch's shrines of old,
Leave Barbary's pirates to their blood-bought gold,
Let Holland steal her victims, force them o'er
To toils and death on Java's morbid shore;

Some cloke, some color all these crimes may plead;
Tis avarice, passion, blind religion's deed;
But Britons here, in this fraternal broil,
Grave, cool, deliberate in thy service toil.
Far from the nation's eye, whose nobler soul
Their wars would humanize, their pride control,
They lose the lessons that her laws impart
And change the British for the brutal heart.
Fired by no passion, madden'd by no zeal,
No priest, no Plutus bids them not to feel;
Unpaid, gratuitous, on torture bent,
Their sport is death, their pastime to torment;
All other gods they scorn, but bow the knee,
And curb, well pleased, O Cruelty, to thee.

Come then, curst goddess, where thy votaries reign,
Inhale their incense from the land and main;
Come to Newyork, their conquering arms to greet,
Brood o'er their camp and breathe along their fleet;
The brother chiefs of Howe's illustrious name
Demand thy labors to complete their fame.
What shrieks of agony thy praises sound!
What grateless dungeons groan beneath the ground!

See the black (37) Prison Ship's expanding womb
Impested thousands, quick and dead, entomb.
Barks after barks the captured seamen bear,
Transboard and crowd thy silent victims there;
A hundred scows, from all the neighboring shore,
Spread the dull sail and ply the constant oar,
Waſt wrecks of armies from the well fought field,
And famisht garrisons who bravely yield;
They mount the hulk, and, cramm'd within the cave,
Hail their last house, their living floating grave.

She comes, the fiend! her grinning jaws expand,
Her brazen eyes cast lightning o'er the strand,
Her wings like thunder-clouds the welkin sweep,
Brush the tall spires and shade the shuddering deep;
She gains the deck, displays her wonted store
Her cords and scourges wet with prisoners' gore;
Gripes, pincers, thumb-screws spread beneath her feet,
Slow poisonous drugs and loads of putrid meat;
Disease hangs drizzling from her slimy locks,
And hot contagion issues from her box.

O'er the closed hatches ere she takes her place,
She moves the massy planks a little space,

Opes a small passage to the cries below
That feast her soul on messages of wo;
There sits with gaping ear and changeless eye,
Drinks every groan and treasures every sigh,
Sustains the faint, their miseries to prolong,
Revives the dying and unnerves the strong.
But as the infected mass resign their breath,
She keeps with joy the register of death.
As tost thro portholes from the encumber'd cave,
Corpse after corpse fall dashing in the wave;
Corpse after corpse, for days and months and years,
The tide bears off, and still its current clears;
At last, o'erloaded with the putrid gore,
The slime-clad waters thicken round the shore.
Green Ocean's self, that oft his wave renews,
That drinks whole fleets with all their slaughter'd crews,
That laves, that purifies the earth and sky,
Yet ne'er before resign'd his natural dye,
Here purples, blushes for the race he bore
To rob and ravage this unconquer'd shore;
The scaly nations, as they travel by,
Catch the contagion, sicken, gasp and die,

Now Hesper turns the Hero's tearful eye
To other fields where other standards fly;
For here constrain'd new warfare to disclose
And show the feats of more than mortal foes,
Where interposing with celestial might,
His own dread labors must decide the fight,
He bids the scene with pomp unusual rise
To teach Columbus how to read the skies.
He marks the trace of Howe's triumphant course
And wheels o'er Jersey plains his gathering force;
Where dauntless Washington begirt with foes
Still greater rises as the danger grows,
And wearied troops, o'er kindred warriors slain,
Attend his march thro many a sanguine plain.
From Hudson's bank to Trenton's wintry strand
He guards in firm retreat his feeble band;
Britons by thousands on his flanks advance,
Bend o'er his rear and point the lifted lance.
Past Delaware's frozen stream, with scanty force,
He checks retreat; then turning back his course,
Remounts the wave and thro the mingled roar
Of ice and storm reseeks the hostile shore,

Wrapt in the gloom of night. The offended Flood
Starts from his cave, assumes the indignant god,
Rears thro the parting tide his foamy form
And with his fiery eyeballs lights the storm.
He stares around him on the host he heard,
Clears his choked urn, and smooths his icy beard
And thus: Audacious chief, this troubled wave
Tempt not; or tempting, here shall gape thy grave.
Is nothing sacred to thy venturous might?
The howling storm, the holy truce of night,
High tossing ice-isles crashing round thy side,
Insidious rocks that pierce the tumbling tide?
Fear then this forceful arm, and hear once more,
Death stands between thee and that shelvy shore.
The chief beholds the god and notes his cry,
But onward drives nor pauses to reply;
Calls to each bark and spirits every host
To toil, gain, tempt the interdicted coast.
The crews, regardless of the doubling roar,
Breast the strong helm and wrestle with the oar,
Stem with resurgent prow the struggling spray
And with phosphoric lanterns shape their way.

The god perceived his warning words were vain,
And rose more furious to assert his reign,
Lasht up a loftier surge and heaved on high
A ridge of billows that obstruct the sky;
And, as the accumulated mass he rolls,
Bares the sharp rocks and lifts the gaping shoals.
Forward the fearless barges plunge and bound,
Top the curl'd wave or grind the flinty ground,
Careen, whirl, right, and sidelong dasht and tost,
Now seem to reach and now to lose the coast.
Still unsubdued the sea-drencht army toils,
Each buoyant skiff the flouncing godhead foils;
He raves and roars and in delirious wo
Calls to his aid his ancient hoary foe,
Almighty Frost; when thus the vanquisht Flood
Bespeaks in haste the great earth-rending god:
Father of storms! behold this mortal race
Confound my force and brave me to my face.
Not all my waves by all my tempests driven
Nor black night brooding o'er the starless heaven
Can check their course; they toss and plunge amain,
And lo my guardian rocks project their points in vain.

Come to my help, and with thy stiffening breath
Clog their strain'd helms, distend their limbs in death.
Tho ancient enmity our realms divide,
And oft thy chains arrest my laboring tide,
Let strong necessity our cause combine,
Thy own disgrace anticipate in mine;
Even now their oars thy sleet in vain congeals,
Thy crumbling ice-cakes crash beneath their keels;
Their impious arms already cope with ours,
And mortal man defies immortal Powers.

Roused at the call, the monarch mounts the storm;
In muriat flakes he robes his nitrous form,
Glares thro the compound, all its blast inhales,
And seas turn crystal where he breathes his gales.
He comes careering o'er his bleak domain,
But comes untended by his usual train;
Hail, sleet and snow-rack far behind him fly,
Too weak to wade thro this petrific sky,
Whose air consolidates and cuts and stings,
And shakes hoar tinsel from its flickering wings.
Earth heaves and cracks beneath the alighting god;
He gains the pass, bestrides the roaring flood,

Shoots from his nostrils one wide withering sheet
Of treasured meteors on the struggling fleet;
The waves conglaciate instant, fix in air,
Stand like a ridge of rocks and shiver there.
The barks confounded in their headlong surge
Or wedged in crystal cease their oars to urge;
Some with prone prow, as plunging down the deep,
And some remounting o'er the slippery steep
Seem laboring still, but moveless, lifeless all;
And the chill'd army here awaits its fall.
  But Hesper, guardian of Hesperia's right,
From his far heaven looks thro the rayless night,
And stung to vengeance at the unequal strife,
To save her host, in jeopardy of life,
Starts from his throne, ascends his flamy car
And turns tremendous to the field of war.
His wheels, resurging from the depth of even,
Roll back the night, streak wide the startled heaven,
Regain their easting with reverted gyres
And stud their path with scintillating fires.
He cleaves the clouds; and swift as beams of day
O'er California sweeps his splendid way;

Missouri's mountains at his passage nod
And now sad Delaware feels the present god
And trembles at his tread. For here to fight
Rush two dread Powers of such unmeasured might,
As threats to annihilate his doubtful reign,
Convulse the heaven and mingle earth and main.
  Frost views his brilliant foe with scornful eye
And whirls a tenfold tempest thro the sky;
Where each fine atom of the immense of air,
Steel'd, pointed, barb'd for unexampled war,
Sings o'er the shuddering ground; when thus he broke
Contemptuous silence, and to Hesper spoke:
Thou comest in time to share their last disgrace,
To change to crystal with thy rebel race,
Stretch thy huge corse o'er Delaware's bank afar
And learn the force of elemental war.
Or if undying life thy lamp inspire,
Take that one blast and to thy sky retire;
There, roll'd eternal round the heavens, proclaim
Thy own disaster and my deathless fame.
I come, said Hesper, not to insult the brave,
But break thy sceptre and let loose my wave,

Teach the proud stream more peaceful tides to roll,
And send thee howling to thy stormy pole;
That drear dominion shall thy rage confine;
This land, these waters and those troops are mine.
He added not; and now the sable storm,
Pierced by strong splendor, burst before his form;
His visage stern an awful lustre shed,
His pearly planet play'd around his head.
He seized a lofty pine, whose roots of yore
Struck deep in earth to guard the sandy shore
From hostile ravage of the mining tide,
That rakes with spoils of earth its crumbling side.
He wrencht it from the soil, and o'er the foe,
Whirl'd the strong trunk and aim'd a sweeping blow,
That sung thro air, but miss'd the moving god
And fell wide crashing on the frozen flood.
For many a rood the shivering ice it tore,
Loosed every bark and shook the sounding shore;
Stroke after stroke with doubling force he plied,
Foil'd the hoar fiend and pulverized the tide.
The baffled tyrant quits the desperate cause;
From Hesper's heat the river swells and thaws,

The fleet rolls gently to the Jersey coast,
And morning splendors greet the landing host.
  Tis here dread Washington, when first the day
O'er Trenton beam'd to light his rapid way,
Pour'd the rude shock on Britain's vanguard train
And led whole squadrons in his captive chain;
Where veteran troops to half their numbers yield,
Tread back their steps or press the sanguine field,
To Princeton plains precipitate their flight
Thro new disasters and unfinisht fight,
Resign their conquests by one sad surprise,
Sink in their pride and see their rivals rise.
  Here dawn'd the daystar of Hesperia's fame,
Here herald glory first emblazed her name;
On Delaware's bank her base of empire stands,
The work of Washington's immortal hands;
Prompt at his side while gallant Mercer trod
And seal'd the firm foundation with his blood.
In future years, if right the Muse divine,
Some great memorial on this bank shall shine;
A column bold its granite shaft shall rear,
Swell o'er the strand and check the passing air,

Cast its broad image on the watery glade,
And Bristol greet the monumental shade;
Eternal emblem of that gloomy hour,
When the great general left her storm-beat shore,
To tempest, night and his own sword consign'd
His country's fates, the fortunes of mankind.
  Where sealike Laurence rolling in his pride
With Ocean's self disputes the tossing tide,
From shore to shore, thro dim distending skies,
Beneath full sails imbanded nations rise.
Britain and Brunswick here their flags unfold,
Here Hessia's hordes, for toils of slaughter sold,
Anspach and Darmstat swell the hireling train,
Proud Caledonia crowds the masted main,
Hibernian kerns and Hanoverian slaves
Move o'er the decks and darken wide the waves.
  Tall on the boldest bark superior shone
A warrior ensign'd with a various crown;
Myrtles and laurels equal honors join'd, (38)
Which arms had purchased and the Muses twined;
His sword waved forward, and his ardent eye
Seem'd sharing empires in the southern sky,

Beside him rose a herald to proclaim
His various honors, titles, feats and fame;
Who raised an opening scroll, where proudly shone
Burgoyne and vengeance from the British throne.
  Champlain receives the congregated host,
And his husht waves beneath the sails are lost;
Ticonderoga rears his rocks in vain,
Nor Edward's walls the weighty shock sustain;
Deep George's loaded lake reluctant guides
Their bounding barges o'er his (39) sacred tides.
State after state the splendid pomp appals,
Each town surrenders, every fortress falls;
Sinclair retires; and with his feeble train,
In slow retreat o'er many a fatal plain,
Allures their march; wide moves their furious force
And flaming hamlets mark their wasting course;
Thro fortless realms their spreading ranks are wheel'd,
On Mohawk's western wave, on Bennington's dread field.
  At last where Hudson, with majestic pace,
Swells at the sight and checks his rapid race,
Thro dark Stillwater slow and silent moves
And flying troops with sullen pause reproves,

A few firm bands their starry standard rear,
Wheel, front and face the desolating war.
Sudden the patriot flame each province warms,
Deep danger calls, the freemen quit their farms,
Seize their tried muskets, name their chiefs to lead,
Indorse their knapsacks and to vengeance speed.
O'er all the land the kindling ardor flies,
Troop follows troop, and flags on flags arise,
Concentred, train'd, their forming files unite,
Swell into squadrons and demand the fight.
When Xerxes, raving at his sire's disgrace,
Pour'd his dark millions on the coast of Thrace,
O'er groaning Hellespont his broad bridge hurl'd,
Hew'd ponderous Athos from the trembling world,
Still'd with his weight of ships the struggling main
And bound the billows in his boasted chain,
Wide o'er proud Macedon he wheel'd his course,
Thrace, Thebes, Thessalia join'd his furious force.
Thro six torn states his hovering swarms increase,
And hang tremendous on the skirts of Greece;
Deep groan the shrines of all her guardian gods,
Sad Pelion shakes, divine Olympus nods,

Shockt Ossa sheds his hundred hills of snow,
And Tempe swells her murmuring brook below;
Wild in her starts of rage the Pythian shrieks,
Dodona's Oak the pangs of nature speaks,
Eleusis quakes thro all her mystic caves,
And black Trophonius gapes a thousand graves.
But soon the freeborn Greeks to vengeance rise,
Brave Sparta springs where first the danger lies,
Her self-devoted band, in one steel'd mass,
Plunge in the gorge of death and choke the pass.
Athenian youths the unwieldy war to meet,
Couch the stiff lance or mount the well arm'd fleet;
They sweep the incumber'd seas of their vast load
And fat their fields with lakes of Asian blood.
So leapt our youths to meet the invading hordes,
Fame fired their courage, freedom edged their swords.
Gates in their van, on high-hill'd Bemus rose,
Waved his blue steel and dared the headlong foes;
Undaunted Lincoln, laboring on his right,
Urged every arm, and gave them hearts to fight;
Starke, at the dexter flank, the onset claims,
Indignant Herkimer the left inflames;

He bounds exulting to commence the strife
And buy the victory with his barter'd life.
And why sweet Minstrel, from the harp of fame
Withhold so long that once resounding name?
The chief who steering by the boreal star
O'er wild Canadia led our infant war,
In desperate straits superior powers display'd,
Burgoyne's dread scourge, Montgomery's ablest aid;
Ridgefield and Compo saw his valorous might
With ill arm'd swains put veteran troops to flight.
Tho treason foul hath since absorb'd his soul,
Bade waves of dark oblivion round him roll,
Sunk his proud heart abhorrent and abhorr'd,
Effaced his memory and defiled his sword;
Yet then untarnisht roll'd his conquering car;
Then famed and foremost in the ranks of war
Brave Arnold trod; high valor warm'd his breast,
And beams of glory play'd around his crest.
Here toils the chief; whole armies from his eye
Resume their souls and swift to combat fly.
Campt on a hundred hills, and trencht in form,
Burgoyne's long legions view the gathering storm;

Uncounted nations round their general stand,
And wait the signal from his guiding hand.
Canadia crowds her Gallic colons there,
Ontario's yelling tribes torment the air,
Wild Huron sends his lurking hordes from far,
Insidious Mohawk swells the woodland war;
Scalpers and ax-men rush from Erie's shore,
And Iroquois augments the war whoop roar;
While all his ancient troops his train supply,
Half Europe's banners waving thro the sky;
Deep squadron'd horse support his endless flanks,
And parkt artillery frowns behind the ranks.
Flusht with the conquest of a thousand fields
And rich with spoils that all the region yields,
They burn with zeal to close the long campaign
And crush Columbia on this final plain.
His fellow chiefs inhale the hero's flame,
Nerves of his arm and partners in his fame:
Phillips, with treasured thunders poised and wheel'd
In brazen tubes prepares to rake the field;
The trench-tops darken with the sable rows,
And tipt with fire the waving match-rope glows.

There gallant Reidesel in German guise,
And Specht and Breyman prompt for action rise;
His savage hordes the murderous Johnson (40) leads,
Files thro the woods and treads the tangled weeds,
Shuns open combat, teaches where to run,
Skulk, couch the ambush, aim the hunter's gun,
Whirl the sly tomahawk, the war whoop sing,
Divide the spoil and pack the scalps they bring.
Frazer in quest of glory seeks the field;—
False glare of glory, what hast thou to yield?
How long, deluding phantom, wilt thou blind,
Mislead, debase, unhumanize mankind?
Bid the bold youth, his headlong sword who draws,
Heed not the object nor inquire the cause,
But seek, adventuring like an errant knight,
Wars not his own, gratuitous in fight,
Greet the gored field, then plunging thro the fire,
Mow down his men, with stupid pride expire,
Shed from his closing eyes the finisht flame
And ask, for all his crimes, a deathless name?
And when shall solid glory pure and bright
Alone inspire us and our deeds requite?

When shall the applause of men their chiefs pursue
In just proportion to the good they do,
On virtue's base erect the shrine of fame,
Define her empire and her code proclaim?
  Unhappy Frazer! little hast thou weigh'd
The crimeful cause thy valor comes to aid.
Far from thy native land, thy sire, thy wife,
Love's lisping race that cling about thy life,
Thy soul beats high, thy thoughts expanding roam
On battles past and laurels yet to come:
Alas, what laurels? where the lasting gain?
A pompous funeral on a desert plain!
The cannon's roar, the muffled drums proclaim,
In one short blast, thy momentary fame;
And some war minister per-hazard reads
In what far field the tool of placemen bleeds.
  Brave Heartly strode in youth's o'erweening pride;
Housed in the camp he left his blooming bride,
The sweet Lucinda; whom her sire from far,
On steeds high bounding o'er the waste of war,
Had guided thro the lines and hither led,
That fateful morn, the plighted chief to wed.

He deem'd, deluded sire! the contest o'er,
That routed rebels dared the fight no more;
And came to mingle, as the tumult ceased,
The victor's triumph with the nuptial feast.
They reacht his tent; when now with loud alarms
The morn burst forth and roused the camp to arms;
Conflicting passions seized the lover's breast,
Bright honor call'd and bright Lucinda prest:
And wilt thou leave me for that clangorous call?
Traced I these deserts but to see thee fall?
I know thy valorous heart, thy zeal that speeds
Where dangers press and boldest battle bleeds.
My father said blest Hymen here should join
With sacred Love to make Lucinda thine;
But other union these dire drums foredoom,
The dark dead union of the eternal tomb.
On yonder plain, soon sheeted o'er with blood,
Our nuptial couch shall prove a crimson clod;
For there this night thy livid corse must lie,
I'll seek it there and on that bosom die.
Yet go; tis duty calls; but o'er thy head
Let this white plume its floating foliage spread;

That from the rampart, thro the troubled air,
These eyes may trace thee toiling in the war.
She fixt the feather on his crest above,
Bound with the mystic knot, the knot of love;
He parted silent, but in silent prayer,
Bade Love and Hymen guard the timorous fair.

Where Saratoga show'd her champaign side,
That Hudson bathed with still untainted tide,
The opposing pickets pusht their scouting files,
Wheel'd, skirmisht, halted, practised all their wiles;
Each to mislead, insnare, exhaust their foes
And court the conquest ere the armies close.

Now roll like winged storms the solid lines,
The clarion thunders and the battle joins;
Thick flames in vollied flashes load the air.
And echoing mountains give the noise of war;
Sulphureous clouds rise reddening round the height,
And veil the skies and wrap the sounding fight.
Soon from the skirts of smoke, where thousands toil,
Ranks roll away and into light recoil;
Starke pours upon them in a storm of lead;
His hosted swains bestrew the field with dead,

Pierce with strong bayonets the German reins,
Whelm two battalions in his captive chains,
Bid Baum with wounds enfeebled quit the field
And Breyman next his gushing lifeblood yield.
This Frazer sees, and thither turns his course,
Bears down before them with Britannia's force,
Wheels a broad column on the victor flank
And springs to vengeance thro the foremost rank.
Lincoln, to meet the hero, sweeps the plain;
His ready bands the laboring Starke sustain;
Host matching host, the doubtful battle burns,
And now the Britons, now their foes by turns
Regain the ground; till Frazer feels the force
Of a rude grapeshot in his flouncing horse;
Nor knew the chief, till struggling from the fall,
That his gored thigh had first received the ball.
He sinks expiring on the slippery soil;
Shockt at the sight, his baffled troops recoil;
Where Lincoln, pressing with redoubled might,
Broke thro their squadrons and confirm'd the flight;
When this brave leader met a stunning blow,
That stopt his progress and avenged the foe.

He left the field; but prodigal of life,
Unwearied Francis still prolong'd the strife;
Till a chance carabine attain'd his head
And stretcht the hero mid the vulgar dead.
His near companions rush with ardent gait,
Swift to revenge, but soon to share his fate;
Brown, Adams, Coburn, falling side by side,
Drench the chill sod with all their vital tide.
  Firm on the west bold Herkimer sustains
The gather'd shock of all Canadia's trains;
Colons and wildmen post their skulkers there,
Outflank his pickets and assail his rear,
Drive in his distant scouts with hideous blare
And press, on three sides close, the hovering war.
Johnson's own shrieks commence the deafening din,
Rouse every ambush and the storm begin.
A thousand thickets, thro each opening glen,
Pour forth their hunters to the chase of men;
Trunks of huge trees and rocks and ravines lend
Unnumber'd batteries and their files defend;
They fire, they squat, they rise, advance and fly,
And yells and groans alternate rend the sky.

The well aim'd hatchet cleaves the helmless head,
Mute showers of arrows and loud storms of lead
Rain thick from hands unseen and sudden fling
A deep confusion thro the laboring wing.
  But Herkimer undaunted quits the stand,
Breaks in loose files his disencumber'd band,
Wheels on the howling glens each light arm'd troop
And leads himself where Johnson tones his whoop,
Pours thro his copse a well directed fire;
The semisavage sees his tribes retire,
Then follows thro the brush in full horse speed,
And gains the hilltop where the Hurons lead;
Here turns his courser; when a grateful sight
Recals his stragglers and restrains his flight.
For Herkimer no longer now sustains
The loss of blood that his faint vitals drains:
A ball had pierced him ere he changed his field;
The slow sure death his prudence had conceal'd,
Till dark derouted foes should yield to flight,
And his firm friends could finish well the fight.
  Lopt from his horse the hero sinks at last;
The Hurons ken him and with hallooing blast

Shake the vast wilderness; the tribes around
Drink with broad ears and swell the rending sound,
Rush back to vengeance with tempestuous might,
Sweep the long slopes from every neighboring height,
Full on their checkt pursuers; who regain,
From all their woods, the first contested plain.
Here open fight begins; and sure defeat
Had forced that column to a swift retreat,
But Arnold toiling thro the distant smoke
Beheld their plight, a small detachment took,
Bore down behind them with his field-park loud
And hail'd his grapeshot thro the savage crowd;
Strow'd every copse with dead and chased afar
The affrighted relics from the skirts of war.
  But on the centre swells the heaviest charge.
The squares develop and the lines enlarge.
Here Kosciusko's mantling works conceal'd
His batteries mute, but soon to scour the field;
Morgan with all his marksmen flanks the foe,
Hull, Brooks and Courtland in the vanguard glow;
Here gallant Dearborn leads his light arm'd train,
Here Scammel towers, here Silly skakes the plain.

Gates guides the onset with his waving brand,
Assigns their task to each unfolding band,
Sustains, inspirits, prompts the warrior's rage,
Now bids the flank and now the front engage,
Points the stern riflers where their slugs to pour
And tells the unmasking batteries when to roar.
For here impetuous Powell wheels and veers
His royal guards, his British grenadiers;
His Highland broadswords cut their wasting course,
His horse-artillery whirls its furious force.
Here Specht and Reidesel to battle bring
Their scattering yagers from each folding wing;
And here, concentred in tremendous might,
Britain's whole park descending to the fight
Roars thro the ranks; tis Philips leads the train
And toils and thunders o'er the shuddering plain.
Burgoyne, secure of victory, from his height
Eyes the whole field and orders all the fight,
Marks where his veterans plunge their fiercest fire
And where his foes seem halting to retire,
Already sees the starry staff give way,
And British ensigns gaining on the day;

When from the western wing, in steely glare,
All conquering Arnold surged the tide of war.
Columbia kindles as her hero comes;
Her trump's shrill clangor and her deafening drums
Redoubling sound the charge; they rage, they burn,
And hosted Europe trembles in her turn.
So when Pelides' absence checkt her fate,
All Ilion issued from her guardian gate;
Her huddling squadrons like a tempest pour'd,
Each man a hero and each dart a sword,
Full on retiring Greece tumultuous fall,
And Greece reluctant seeks her sheltering wall;
But Peleus' son rebounding o'er the plain,
Troy backward starts and seeks her towers again.
Arnold's dread falchion with terrific sway
Rolls on the ranks and rules the doubtful day,
Confounds with one wide sweep the astonisht foes
And bids at last the scene of slaughter close.
Pale rout begins, Britannia's broken train
Tread back their steps and scatter from the plain,
To their strong camp precipitate retire,
And wide behind them streams the roaring fire.

Meantime, the skirts of war as Johnson gored,
His kindred cannibals desert their lord;
They scour the waste for undistinguisht prey,
Howl thro the night the horrors of the day,
Scalp every straggler from all parties stray'd,
Each wounded wanderer thro the moonlight glade;
And while the absent armies give them place,
Each camp they plunder and each world disgrace.

One deed shall tell what fame great Albion draws
From these auxiliars in her barbarous cause,
Lucinda's fate; the tale, ye nations, hear;
Eternal ages, trace it with a tear.
Long from the rampart, thro the imbattled field,
She spied her Heartly where his column wheel'd,
Traced him with stedfast eye and tortured breast
That heaved in concert with his dancing crest;
And oft, with head advanced and hand outspread,
Seem'd from her love to ward the flying lead;
Till, dimm'd by distance and the gathering cloud,
At last he vanisht in the warrior crowd.
She thought he fell; and wild with fearless air,
She left the camp to brave the woodland war,

Made a long circuit, all her friends to shun
And wander'd wide beneath the falling sun;
Then veering to the field, the pickets past
To gain the hillock where she miss'd him last.
Fond maid, he rests not there; from finisht fight
He sought the camp and closed the rear of flight.
He hurries to his tent;—oh rage! despair!
No glimpse, no tidings of the frantic fair;
Save that some carmen, as acamp they drove,
Had seen her coursing for the western grove.
Faint with fatigue and choked with burning thirst,
Forth from his friends with bounding leap he burst,
Vaults o'er the palisade with eyes on flame
And fills the welkin with Lucinda's name,
Swift thro the wild wood paths frenetic springs,—
Lucind! Lucinda! thro the wild wood rings.
All night he wanders; barking wolves alone
And screaming night-birds answer to his moan;
For war had roused them from their savage den;
They scent the field, they snuff the walks of men.
The fair one too, of every aid forlorn,
Had raved and wander'd, till officious morn

Awaked the Mohawks from their short repose
To glean the plunder ere their comrades rose.
Two Mohawks met the maid,—historian, hold!—
Poor human nature, must thy shame be told?
Where then that proud preeminence of birth,
Thy moral sense? the brightest boast of earth.
Had but the tiger changed his heart for thine,
Could rocks their bowels with that heart combine,
Thy tear had gusht, thy hand relieved her pain
And led Lucinda to her lord again.

She starts, with eyes upturn'd and fleeting breath,
In their raised axes views her instant death,
Spreads her white hands to heaven in frantic prayer,
Then runs to grasp their knees and crouches there.
Her hair, half lost along the shrubs she past,
Rolls in loose tangles round her lovely waist;
Her kerchief torn betrays the globes of snow
That heave responsive to her weight of woe.
Does all this eloquence suspend the knife?
Does no superior bribe contest her life?
There does: the scalps by British gold are paid;
A long-hair'd scalp adorns that heavenly head;

And comes the sacred spoil from friend or foe,
No marks distinguish and no man can know.
With calculating pause and demon grin,
They seize her hands and thro her face divine
Drive the descending ax; the shriek she sent
Attain'd her lover's ear; he thither bent
With all the speed his wearied limbs could yield,
Whirl'd his keen blade and stretcht upon the field
The yelling fiends; who there disputing stood
Her gory scalp, their horrid prize of blood.
He sunk delirious on her lifeless clay
And past, in starts of sense, the dreadful day.
Are these thy trophies, Carleton! these the swords
Thy hand unsheath'd (41) and gave the savage hordes,
Thy boasted friends, by treaties brought from far
To aid thy master in his murderous war?
But now Britannia's chief, with proud disdain
Coopt in his camp, demands the field again,
Back to their fate his splendid host he drew,
Swell'd high their rage and led the charge anew;
Again the batteries roar, the lightnings play,
Again they fall, again they roll away;

For now Columbia with rebounding might
Foil'd quick their columns, but confined their flight.
Her wings, like fierce tornados, gyring ran,
Crusht their wide flanks and gain'd their flying van;
Here Arnold charged; the hero storm'd and pour'd
A thousand thunders where he turn'd his sword.
No pause, no parley; onward far he fray'd,
Dispersed whole squadrons every bound he made,
Broke thro their rampart, seized their camp and stores,
And pluckt the standard from their broken towers.
Aghast, confounded in the midway field,
They drop their arms; the banded nations yield.
When sad Burgoyne, in one disastrous day,
Sees future crowns and former wreaths decay,
His banners furl'd, his long battalions wheel'd
To pile their muskets on the battle field;
While two pacific armies shade one plain,
The mighty victors and the captive train.

BOOK VII.

ARGUMENT.

Coast of France rises in vision. Louis, to humble the British power, forms an alliance with the American states. This brings France, Spain and Holland into the war, and rouses Hyder Ally to attack the English in India. The vision returns to America, where the military operations continue with various success. Battle of Monmouth. Storming of Stonypoint by Wayne. Actions of Lincoln and surrender of Charleston. Movements of Cornwallis. Actions of Greene and battle of Eutaw. French army arrives and joins the American. They march to besiege the English army of Cornwallis in York and Gloster. Naval battle of Degrasse and Graves. Two of their ships grappled and blown up. Progress of the siege. A citadel mined and blown up. Capture of Cornwallis and his army. Their banners furled and muskets piled on the field of battle.

COLUMBIAD.

BOOK VII.

Thus view'd the Pair; when lo, in eastern skies,
From glooms unfolding, Gallia's coasts arise.
Bright o'er the scenes of state a golden throne
Instarr'd with gems and hung with purple shone;
Young Bourbon there in royal splendor sat,
And fleets and moving armies round him wait.
For now the contest, with increased alarms,
Fill'd every court and roused the world to arms;
As Hesper's hand, that light from darkness brings,
And good to nations from the scourge of kings,
In this dread hour bade broader beams unfold
And the new world illuminate the old.

In Europe's realms a school of sages trace
The expanding dawn that waits the reasoning race;
On the bright Occident they fix their eyes,
Thro glorious toils where struggling nations rise;
Where each firm deed, each new illustrious name
Calls into light a field of nobler fame:
A field that feeds their hope, confirms the plan
Of well poised freedom and the weal of man.
They scheme, they theorize, expand their scope,
Glance o'er Hesperia to her utmost cope;
Where streams unknown for other oceans stray,
Where suns unseen their waste of beams display,
Where sires of unborn nations claim their birth
And ask their empires in those wilds of earth.
While round all eastern climes, with painful eye,
In slavery sunk they see the kingdoms lie,
Whole states exhausted to enrich a throne,
Their fruits untasted and their rights unknown;
Thro tears of grief, that speak the well taught mind,
They hail the era that relieves mankind.
Of these the first, the Gallic sages stand,
And urge their king to lift an aiding hand.

The cause of humankind their souls inspired,
Columbia's wrongs ther indignation fired;
To share her fateful deeds their counsel moved,
To base in practice what in theme they proved:
That no proud privilege from birth can spring,
No right divine nor compact (42) form a king;
That in the people dwells the sovereign sway,
Who rule by proxy, by themselves obey;
That virtues, talents are the test of awe,
And Equal Rights the only source of law.
Surrounding heroes wait the monarch's word,
In foreign fields to draw the patriot sword,
Prepared with joy to join those infant powers
Who build republics on the western shores.
By honest guile the royal ear they bend
And lure him on, blest freedom to defend;
That, once recognised once establisht there,
The world might learn her proffer'd boon to share.
But artful arguments their plan disguise,
Garb'd in the gloss that suits a monarch's eyes.
By arms to humble Britain's haughty power,
From her to sever that extended shore,

Contents his utmost wish. For this he lends
His powerful aid and calls the opprest his friends.
The league proposed, he lifts his arm to save
And speaks the borrow'd language of the brave:
  Ye states of France, and ye of rising name
Who work those distant miracles of fame,
Hear and attend; let heaven the witness bear,
We wed the cause, we join the righteous war.
Let leagues eternal bind each friendly land,
Given by our voice and stablisht by our hand;
Let that brave people fix their infant sway
And spread their blessings with the bounds of day;
Yet know, ye nations, hear ye Powers above,
Our purposed aid no views of conquest move;
In that young world revives no ancient claim
Of regions peopled by the Gallic name;
Our envied bounds, already stretcht afar,
Nor ask the sword nor fear encroaching war;
But virtue, coping with the tyrant power
That drenches earth in her best children's gore,
With nature's foes bids former compact cease;
We war reluctant and our wish is peace;

For man's whole race the sword of France we draw;
Such is our will, and let our will be law.
He spoke; his moving armies veil'd the plain,
His fleets rode bounding on the western main;
O'er lands and seas the loud applauses rung
And war and union dwelt on every tongue.
The other Bourbon caught the splendid strain,
To Gallia's arms he joins the powers of Spain;
Their sails assemble; Crillon lifts the sword,
Minorca bows and owns her ancient lord.
But while dread Elliott (43) shakes the Midland wave,
They strive in vain the Calpian rock to brave
Batavia's states with equal speed prepare
Thro western isles to meet the naval war;
For Albion there rakes rude the tortured main
And foils the force of Holland, France and Spain.
Where old Indostan still perfumes the skies,
To furious strife his ardent myriads rise;
Fierce Hyder there, unconquerably bold,
Bids a new flag its horned moons unfold,
Spreads o'er Carnatic kings his splendid force
And checks the Britons in their wasting course.

Europe's pacific powers their counsels join,
The laws of trade to settle and define.
The imperial Moscovite around him draws
Each Baltic state to join the righteous cause;
Whose arm'd Neutrality the way prepares
To check the ravages of future wars;
Till by degrees the wasting sword shall cease
And commerce lead to universal peace.

Thus all the ancient world with anxious eyes
Enjoy the lights that gild Atlantic skies,
Wake to new life, assume a borrow'd flame,
Enlarge the lustre and partake the fame.
So mounts of ice, that polar heavens invade,
Tho piled unseen thro night's long wintry shade,
When morn at last illumes their glaring throne,
Give back the day and imitate the sun.

But still Columbus, on his war-beat shore,
Sees Albion's fleets her new battalions pour;
The states unconquer'd still their terrors wield
And stain with mingled gore the embattled field.
On Pennsylvania's various plains they move,
And adverse armies equal slaughter prove;

Columbia mourns her Nash in combat slain
Britons around him press the gory plain;
Skirmish and cannonade and distant fire
Each power diminish and each nation tire.
Till Howe from fruitless toil demands repose
And leaves despairing in a land of foes
His wearied host; who now to reach their fleet,
O'er Jersey hills commence their long retreat,
Tread back the steps their chief had led before
And ask in vain the late abandon'd shore,
Where Hudson meets the main; for on their rear
Columbia moves and checks their swift career.
But where green Monmouth lifts his grassy height,
They halt, they face, they dare the coming fight.
Howe's proud successor, Clinton, hosting there,
To tempt once more the desperate chance of war,
Towers at their head, in hopes to work relief
And mend the errors of his former chief.
Here shines his day; and here with loud acclaim
Begins and ends his little task of fame.
He vaults before them with his balanced blade,
Wheels the bright van and forms the long parade;

Where Britons, Hessians crowd the glittering field,
And all their powers for ready combat wield.
As the dim sun, beneath the skirts of even,
Crimsons the clouds that sail the western heaven;
So in red wavy rows where spread the train
Of men and standards, shone the fateful plain.
They shone, till Washington obscured their light,
And his long ranks roll'd forward to the fight.
He points the charge; the mounted thunders roar
And rake the champaign to the distant shore.
Above the folds of smoke that veil the war,
His guiding sword illumes the fields of air;
And vollied flames bright bursting o'er the plain
Break the brown clouds discovering far the slain;
Till flight begins; the smoke is roll'd away,
And the red standards open into day.
Britons and Germans hurry from the field,
Now wrapt in dust and now to sight reveal'd;
Behind, swift Washington his falchion drives,
Thins the pale ranks, but saves submissive lives.
Hosts captive bow and move behind his arm,
And hosts before him wing the sounding storm;

When the glad sea salutes their fainting sight,
And Albion's fleet wide thundering aids their flight;
They steer to sad Newyork their hasty way
And rue the toils of Monmouth's mournful day.
But Hudson still, with his interior tide,
Laves a rude rock that bears Britannia's pride,
Swells round the headland with indignant roar
And mocks her thunders from his murmuring shore;
When a firm cohort starts from Peckskill plain
To crush the invaders and the post regain.
Here, gallant Hull, again thy sword is tried,
Meigs, Fleury, Butler, laboring side by side,
Wayne takes the guidance, culls the vigorous band,
Strikes out the flint, and bids the nervous hand
Trust the mute bayonet and midnight skies,
To stretch o'er craggy walls the dark surprise.
With axes, handspikes on the shoulder hung,
And the sly watchword whisper'd from the tongue,
Thro different paths the silent march they take,
Plunge, climb the ditch, the palisado break,
Secure each sentinel, each picket shun,
Grope the dim postern where the byways run.

Soon the roused garrison perceives its plight;
Small time to rally and no means of flight,
They spring confused to every post they know,
Point their poised cannon where they hear the foe,
Streak the dark welkin with the flames they pour
And rock the mountain with convulsive roar.
The swift assailants still no fire return,
But, tow'rd the batteries that above them burn,
Climb hard from crag to crag; and scaling higher
They pierce the long dense canopy of fire
That sheeted all the sky; then rush amain,
Storm every outwork, each dread summit gain,
Hew timber'd gates, the sullen drawbridge fall,
File thro and form within the sounding wall.
The Britons strike their flag, the fort forego,
Descend sad prisoners to the plain below.
A thousand veterans, ere the morning rose,
Received their handcuffs from five hundred foes;
And Stonypoint beheld, with dawning day,
His own starr'd standard on his rampart play.
From sackt Savanna, whelm'd in hostile fires,
A few raw troops brave Lincoln now retires;

With rapid march to suffering Charleston goes
To meet the myriads of concentring foes,
Who shade the pointed strand. Each fluvial flood
Their gathering fleets and floating batteries load,
Close their black sails, debark the amphibious host
And with their moony anchors fang the coast.
The bold beleaguer'd post the hero gains
And the hard siege with various fate sustains.
Cornwallis, towering at the British van,
In these fierce toils his wild career began;
He mounts the forky streams and soon bestrides
The narrow neck that parts converging tides,
Sinks the deep trench, erects the mantling tower,
Lines with strong forts the desolated shore,
Hems on all sides the long unsuccour'd place,
With mines and parallels contracts the space;
Then bids the battering floats his labors crown
And pour their bombard on the shuddering town.
High from the decks the mortar's bursting fires
Sweep the full streets and splinter down the spires.
Blaze-trailing fusees vault the night's dim round,
And shells and langrage lacerate the ground;

Till all the tented plain, where heroes tread,
Is torn with crags and covered with the dead.
Each shower of flames renews the townsmen's woe,
They wail the fight, they dread the cruel foe.
Matrons in crowds, while tears bedew their charms,
Babes at their sides and infants in their arms,
Press round their Lincoln and his hand implore,
To save them trembling from the tyrant's power.
He shares their anguish with a moistening eye,
And bids the balls rain thicker thro the sky;
Tries every aid that art and valor yield,
The sap, the countermine, the battling field,
The bold sortie, by famine urged afar,
That dreadful daughter of earth-wasting War.
But vain the conflict now; on all the shore
The foes in fresh brigades around him pour;
He yields at last the well contested prize,
And freedom's banners quit the southern skies.
The victor Britons soon the champaign tread
And far anorth their fire and slaughter spread;
Thro fortless realms, where unarm'd peasants fly,
Cornwallis bears his bloody standard high;

CORNWALLIS RESIGNING HIS SWORD TO WASHINGTON.

O'er Carolina rolls his growing force,
And thousands fall and thousands aid his course;
While in his march athwart the wide domain,
Colonial dastards join his splendid train.
So mountain streams thro slopes of melting snow
Swell their foul waves and flood the world below.

Awhile the Patriarch saw, with heaving sighs,
These crimson flags insult the saddening skies,
Saw desolation whelm his favorite coast,
His children scatter'd and their vigor lost,
Dekalb in furious combat press the plain,
Morgan and Smallwood every shock sustain,
Gates, now no more triumphant, quit the field,
Indignant Davidson his lifeblood yield,
Blount, Gregory, Williamson, with souls of fire
But slender force, from hill to hill retire;
When Greene in lonely greatness takes the ground
And bids at last the trump of vengeance sound.

A few firm patriots to the chief repair,
Raise the star standard and demand the war.
But o'er the regions as he turns his eyes,
What foes develop! and what forts arise!

Rawdon with rapid marches leads their course,
From state to state Cornwallis whirls their force,
Impetuous Tarleton like a torrent pours,
And fresh battalions land along the shores;
Where now resurgent from his captive chain,
Phillips wide storming shakes the field again;
And traitor Arnold, lured by plunder o'er,
Joins the proud powers his valor foil'd before.
  Greene views the tempest with collected soul,
And fates of empires in his bosom roll;
So small his force, where shall he lift the steel?
(Superior hosts o'er every canton wheel)
Or how behold their wanton carnage spread,
Himself stand idle and his country bleed?
Fixt in a moment's pause the general stood
And held his warriors from the field of blood;
Then points the British legions where to steer,
Marks to their chief a rapid wild career,
Wide o'er Virginia lets him foeless roam
To search for pillage and to find his doom,
With short-lived glory feeds his sateless flame,
But leaves the victory to a nobler name,

Gives to great Washington to meet his way,
Nor claims the honors of so bright a day.
  Now to the conquer'd south he turns his force,
Renerves the nation by his rapid course;
Forts fall around him, hosts before him fly,
And captive bands his growing train supply;
A hundred leagues of coast, in one campaign,
Return reconquer'd to their lords again.
At last Britannia's vanguard, near the strand,
Veers on her foe to make one vigorous stand.
Her gallant Stuart here amass'd from far
The veteran legions of the Georgian war,
To aid her hard-pusht powers and quick restore
The British name to that extended shore.
He checks their flight and chooses well their field,
Flankt with a marsh, by lofty woods conceal'd;
Where Eutaw's fountains, tinged of old with gore,
Still murmuring swell'd amid the bones they bore,
Destined again to foul their pebbly stream,
The mournful monuments of human fame;
There Albion's columns ranged in order bright
Stand like a fiery wall and wait the shock of fight.

Swift on the neighboring hill as Greene arose,
He view'd with rapid glance the glittering foes,
Disposed for combat all his ardent train,
To charge, change front, each echelon sustain,
Roused well their rage superior force to prove,
Waved his bright blade and bade the onset move.
As hovering clouds, when morning beams arise,
Hang their red curtains round our eastern skies,
Unfold a space to hail the promised sun
And catch their splendors from his rising throne;
Thus glow'd the opposing fronts, whose steely glare
Glanced o'er the shuddering interval of war.

From Albion's left the cannonade began
And poured thick thunders on Hesperia's van,
Forced in her dexter guards, that skirmisht wide
To prove what powers the forest hills might hide;
They break, fall back, with measured quickstep tread,
Form close, and flank the solid squares they led.
Now roll, with kindling haste, the long stark lines,
From wing to wing the sounding battle joins;
Batteries and field-parks and platoons of fire,
In mingled shocks their roaring blasts expire.

Each front approaching fast, with equal pace,
Devours undaunted their dividing space;
Till, dark beneath the smoke, the meeting ranks
Slope their strong bayonets, with short firm shanks
Protruded from their tubes; each bristling van,
Steel fronting steel and man encountering man,
In dreadful silence tread. As, wrapt from sight,
The nightly ambush moves to secret fight;
So rush the raging files and sightless close
In plunging thrust with fierce conflicting foes.
They reach, they strike, they stagger o'er the slain,
Deal doubtful blows or closing clench their man,
Intwine their twisting limbs, the gun forego,
Wrench off the bayonet and dirk the foe;
Then struggling back reseize the musket bare,
Club the broad breech and headlong whirl to war.
Ranks crush on ranks, with equal slaughter gored,
Warm dripping streams from every lifted sword
Stain the thin carnaged corps; who still maintain,
With mutual shocks, the vengeance of the plain.
At last where Williams fought and Campbell fell,
Unwonted strokes the British line repel.

The rout begins; the shattered wings afar
Roll back in haste and scatter from the war;
They drop their arms, they scour the marshy field,
Whole squadrons fall and faint battalions yield.
The great observer, fixt in his midsky.
View'd the whole combat, saw them fall and fly:
He markt where Greene with every onset drove,
Saw death and victory with his presence move,
Beneath his arm saw Marion, Sumter, Gaine,
Pickens and Sumner shake the astonisht plain;
He saw young Washington, the child of fame,
Preserve in fight the honors of his name.
Lee, Jackson, Hampton, Pinckney, matcht in might,
Roll'd on the storm and hurried fast the flight:
While numerous chiefs, that equal trophies raise,
Wrought, not unseen, the deeds of deathless praise.
As Europe now the newborn states beheld
The shock sustain of many a hard fought field;
Swift o'er the main, with high spread sails advance
Our brave auxiliars from the coast of France.
On the tall decks their curious chiefs explore,
With optic tube, our camp-incumber'd shore;

And, as the lessening wave behind them flies,
Wide scenes of conflict open on their eyes.
Rochambeau foremost with his gleamy brand
Points to each field and singles every band,
Sees Washington the power of nations guide
And longs to toil and conquer by his side.
Two brother chiefs, Viominil the name,
Brothers in birth but twins in generous fame,
Behold with stedfast eye the plains disclose,
Uncase their arms and claim the promised foes.
Biron, beneath his sail, in armor bright,
Frown'd o'er the wave impatient for the fight;
A fiery steed beside the hero stood,
And his blue blade waved forward o'er the crowd.
With eager haste descending on the coast,
Thro the glad states they march their veteran host,
From sea-nursed Newport file o'er western roads,
Pitch many a camp and bridge a hundred floods,
Pass the full towns, where joyful crowds admire
Their foreign speech, gay mien and gilt attire,
Applaud their generous deeds, the zeal that draws
Their swords untried in freedom's doubtful cause.

Thro Hartford plains, on Litchfield hills they gleam,
Wave their white flags o'er Hudson's loaded stream,
Band after band with Delaware's current pour,
Shade Schuylkill's wave and Elk's indented shore,
Join their new friends where allied banners lead,
Demand the foe and bid the war proceed.

Again Columbus turn'd his anxious eye
Where Britain's banner waved along the sky;
And, graced with spoils of many fields of blood,
Cornwallis boastful on a bulkwark stood.
Where York and Gloster's rocky towers bestride
Their parent stream, Virginia's midmost tide,
He campt his hundred nations to regain
Their force, exhausted in the long campaign;
Paused for a moment on a scene so vast,
To plan the future and review the past.
Thro vanquisht provinces and towns in flame
He markt his recent monuments of fame,
His checker'd marches, long and various toils
And camp well stored with wide collected spoils.

High glittering to the sun his hands unfold
A map new drafted on a sheet of gold;

There in delusive haste his burin graved
A country conquer'd and a race enslaved.
Its middle realm, by fairer figures known
And rich with fruits, lay bounded for his own;
Deep through the centre spreads a branching bay,
Full sails ascend and golden rivers stray;
Bright palaces arise relieved in gold,
And gates and streets the crossing lines unfold.
James furrows o'er the plate with turgid tide,
Young Richmond roughens on his masted side;
Reviving Norfolk from her ashes springs,
A golden phenix on refulgent wings;
Patomac's yellow waves reluctant spread
And Vernon rears his rich and radiant head.
Tis here the chief his pointed graver stays,
The bank to burnish with a purer blaze,
Gives all his art, on this bright hill to trace
His future seat and glory of his race;
Deems his long line of lords the realm shall own,
The kings predestined to Columbia's throne.
But while his mind thus quafft its airy food,
And gazing thousands round the rampart stood,

Whom future ease and golden dreams employ,
The songs of triumph and the feast of joy;
Sudden great Washington arose in view,
And allied flags his stately steps pursue;
Gaul's veteran host and young Hesperia's pride
Bend the long march concentring at his side,
Stream over Chesapeak, like sheets of flame,
And drive tempestuous to the field of fame.

Far on the wild expanse, where ocean lies
And scorns all confines but incumbent skies,
Scorns to retain the imprinted paths of men,
To guide their wanderings or direct their ken;
Where warring vagrants, raging as they go,
Ask of the stars their way to find the foe,
Columbus saw two hovering fleets advance,
And rival ensigns o'er their pinions dance.
Graves, on the north, with Albion's flag unfurl'd,
Waves proud defiance to the naval world;
Degrasse, from southern isles, conducts his train
And shades with Gallic sheets the moving main.

Now Morn, unconscious of the coming fray
That soon shall storm the crystal cope of day,

Glows o'er the heavens and with her orient breeze
Fans her fair face and curls the summer seas.
The swelling sails, as far as eye can sweep,
Look thro the skies and awe the shadowy deep,
Lead their long bending lines; and, ere they close,
To count, recognise, circumvent their foes,
Each hauls his wind, the weathergage to gain
And master all the movements of the plain;
Or bears before the breeze with loftier gait,
And, beam to beam, begins the work of fate.
As when the warring winds, from each far pole,
Their adverse storms across the concave roll,
Thin fleecy vapors thro the expansion run,
Veil the blue vault and tremble o'er the sun,
Till the dark folding wings together drive
And, ridged with fire and rockt with thunder, strive;
So, hazing thro the void, at first appear
White clouds of canvas floating on the air,
Then frown the broad black decks, the sails are stay'd,
The gaping portholes cast a frightful shade,
Flames triple tier'd and tides of smoke arise,
And fulminations rock the seas and skies.

From van to rear the roaring deluge runs,
The storm disgorging from a thousand guns,
Each like a vast volcano, spouting wide
His hissing hell-dogs o'er the shuddering tide,
Whirls high his chainshot, cleaves the mast and strows
The shiver'd fragments on the staggering foes;
Whose gunwale sides with iron globes are gored,
And a wild storm of splinters sweeps the board.
Husht are the winds of heaven; no more the gale
Breaks the red rolls of smoke nor flaps the sail;
A dark dead calm continuous clokes the glare
And holds the clouds of sulphur on the war,
Convolving o'er the space that yawns and shines
With frequent flash between the laboring lines.
Nor sun nor sea nor skyborn lightning gleams,
But flaming Phlegethon's asphaltic steams
Streak the long gaping gulf; where varying glow
Carbonic curls above, blue flakes of fire below.

Hither two hostile ships to contact run,
Both grappling, board to board and gun to gun;
Each thro the adverse ports their contents pour,
Rake the lower decks, the interior timbers bore,

Drive into chinks the illumined wads unseen,
Whose flames approach the unguarded magazine.
Above, with shrouds afoul and gunwales mann'd,
Thick halberds clash; and, closing hand to hand,
The huddling troops infuriate from despair
Tug at the toils of death and perish there;
Grenados, carcasses their fragments spread,
And pikes and pistols strow the decks with dead.
Now on the Gallic board the Britons rush,
The intrepid Gauls the rash adventurers crush;
And now, to vengeance stung, with frantic air,
Back on the British maindeck roll the war.
There swells the carnage; all the tar-beat floor
Is clogg'd with spatter'd brains and glued with gore;
And down the ship's black waist, fresh brooks of blood
Course o'er their clots and tinge the sable flood.
Till War, impatient of the lingering strife
That tires and slackens with the waste of life,
Opes with ingulfing gape the astonisht wave
And whelms the combat whole, in one vast grave.
For now the chamber'd powder caught the flames
And into atoms whirl'd the monstrous frames

Of both the entangled ships; the vortex wide
Roars like an Etna thro the belching tide;
And blazing into heaven and bursting high,
Shells, carriages and guns obstruct the sky;
Cords, timbers, trunks of men the welkin sweep
And fall on distant ships or shower along the deep.
The matcht armadas still the fight maintain,
But cautious, distant; lest the staggering main
Drive their whole lines afoul, and one dark day
Glut the proud ocean with too rich a prey.
At last, where scattering fires the cloud disclose,
Hulls heave in sight and blood the decks o'erflows;
Here from the field tost navies rise to view,
Drive back to vengeance and the roar renew,
There shatter'd ships commence their flight afar,
Tow'd thro the smoke, hard struggling from the war;
And some, half seen amid the gaping wave,
Plunge in the whirl they make and gorge their grave.
Soon the dark smoky volumes roll'd away,
And a long line ascended into day;
The pinions swell'd, Britannia's cross arose
And flew the terrors of triumphing foes;

When to Virginia's bay, new shocks to brave,
The Gallic powers their conquering banners wave.
Glad Chesapeak unfolds his bosom wide
And leads their prows to York's contracting tide;
Where still dread Washington directs his way,
And seas and continents his voice obey;
While brave Cornwallis, mid the gathering host,
Perceives his glories gone, his promised empire lost.
  Columbus here with silent joy beheld
His favorite sons the fates of nations wield.
Here joyous Lincoln rose in arms again,
Nelson and Knox moved ardent o'er the plain;
Scammel alert with force unusual trod,
Prepared to seal their victory with his blood;
Cobb, Dearborn, Laurens, Tilghman, green in years
But ripe in glory, tower'd amid their peers;
Death daring Hamilton with splendor shone
And claim'd each post of danger for his own,
Skill'd every arm in war's whole hell to wield,
An Ithacus in camp, an Ajax in the field.
  Their Gallic friends an equal ardor fires;
Brisk emulation every troop inspires:

Where Tarleton turns, with hopes of flight elate,
Brave Biron moves and drives him back to fate,
Hems in his host to wait on Gloster plains
Their finisht labors and their destined chains.
Two British forts the growing siege outflank,
Rake its wide works and awe the tide-beat bank;
Swift from the lines two chosen bands advance,
Our light arm'd scouts, the grenadiers of France;
These young Viominil conducts to fame,
And those Fayette's unerring guidance claim.
No cramm'd cartouch their belted back attires,
No grains of sleeping thunder wait their fires;
The flint, the ramrod spurn'd away they cast;
The strong bright bayonet, imbeaded fast,
Stands beaming from the bore; with this they tread,
Nor heed from high-wall'd foes their showers of lead.
Each rival band, tho wide and distant far,
Springs simultaneous to this task of war;
For here a twofold force each hero draws,
His own proud country and the general cause;
And each with twofold energy contends,
His foes to vanquish and outstrip his friends.

670

They summon all their zeal and wild and warm
O'er flaming ramparts pour the maddening storm,
The mounted cannons crush and lead the foe
Two trains of captives to the plain below;
An equal prize each gallant troop ameeds,
Alike their numbers and alike their deeds.

A strong high citadel still thundering stood
And stream'd her standard o'er the field of blood,
Checkt long the siege with fulminating blare,
Scorn'd all the steel and every globe of war,
Defied fell famine, heapt her growing store
And housed in bombproof all the host she bore.
No rude assault can stretch the scale so high,
In vain the battering siege-guns round her ply;
Mortars well poised their deafening deluge rain,
Load the red skies and shake the shores in vain;
Her huge rock battlements rebound the blow
And roll their loose crags on the men below.

But while the fusing fireballs scorch the sky,
Their mining arts the stanch besiegers ply,
Delve from the bank of York and gallery far,
Deep subterranean, to the mount of war;

Beneath the ditch, thro rocks and fens they go,
Scoop the dark chamber plumb beneath the foe;
There lodge their tons of powder and retire,
Mure the dread passage, wave the fatal fire,
Send a swift messenger to warn the foe
To seek his safety and the post forego.
A taunting answer comes; he dares defy
To spring the mine and all its Etnas try;
When a black miner seized the sulphur'd brand,
Shriekt high for joy and with untrembling hand
Toucht quick the insidious train; lest here the chief
Should change his counsel and afford relief:
For hard the general's task to speak the doom
That sends a thousand heroes to the tomb;
Heroes who know no wrong; who thoughtless speed
Where kings command or where their captains lead.
—Burst with the blast the reeling mountain roars,
Heaves, labors, boils and thro the concave pours
His flaming contents high; he chokes the air
With all his warriors and their works of war;
Guns, bastions, magazines confounded fly,
Vault wide their fresh explosions o'er the sky,

Incumber each far camp and plow profound
With their rude fragments every neighboring ground.
Britain's brave leader, where he sought repose
And deem'd his hill-fort still repulsed the foes,
Starts at the astounding earthquake and descries
His chosen veterans whirling down the skies.
Their mangled members round his balcon fall,
Scorcht in the flames and dasht on every wall:
Sad field of contemplation! here, ye great,
Kings, priests of God, and ministers of state,
Review your system here! behold and scan
Your own fair deeds, your benefits to man!
You will not leave him to his natural toil,
To tame these elements and till the soil,
To reap, share, tithe you what his hand has sown,
Enjoy his treasures and increase your own,
Build up his virtues on the base design'd,
The well toned harmonies of humankind.
You choose to check his toil and band his eyes
To all that's honest and to all that's wise;
Lure with false fame, false morals and false lore,
To barter fields of corn for fields of gore,

To take by bands what single thieves would spare,
And methodize his murders into war.
Now the prest garrison fresh danger warms;
They rush impetuous to each post of arms,
Man the long trench, each embrasure sustain
And pour their langrage on the allied train;
Whose swift approaches, crowding on the line,
Each wing envelop and each front confine.
O'er all sage Washington his arm extends,
Points every movement, every work defends,
Bids closer quarters, bloodier strokes proceed,
New batteries blaze and heavier squadrons bleed.
Line within line fresh parallels inclose;
Here runs a zigzag, there a mantlet grows,
Round the pent foe approaching breastworks rise,
And bombs like meteors vault the flaming skies.
Night, with her hovering wings, asserts in vain
The shades, the silence of her rightful reign;
High roars her canopy with fiery flakes,
And War stalks wilder thro the glare he makes.
With dire dismay the British chief beheld
The foe advance, his veterans shun the field,

Despair and slaughter where he turns his eye,
No hope in combat and no power to fly;
Degrasse victorious shakes the shadowy tide,
Imbodied nations all the champaign hide,
Fosses and batteries, growing on the sight,
Still pour new thunders and increase the fight;
Shells rain before him, rending every mound,
Crags, gunstones, balls o'erturn the tented ground,
From post to post his driven ranks retire,
The earth in crimson and the skies on fire.

Death wantons proud in this decisive round,
For here his hand its favorite victim found;
Brave Scammel perisht here. Ah! short, my friend,
Thy bright career, but glorious to its end.
Go join thy Warren's ghost, your fates compare,
His that commenced, with thine that closed the war;
Freedom, with laurel'd brow but tearful eyes,
Bewails her first and last, her twinlike sacrifice.

Now grateful truce suspends the burning war,
And groans and shouts promiscuous load the air;
When the tired Britons, where the smokes decay,
Quit their strong station and resign the day.

Slow files along the immeasurable train,
Thousands on thousands redden all the plain,
Furl their torn bandrols, all their plunder yield
And pile their muskets on the battle field.
Their wide auxiliar nations swell the crowd,
And the coopt navies from the neighboring flood
Repeat surrendering signals and obey
The landmen's fate on this concluding day.
  Cornwallis first, their late all conquering lord,
Bears to the victor chief his conquer'd sword,
Presents the burnisht hilt and yields with pain
The gift of kings, here brandisht long in vain.
Then bow their hundred banners, trailing far
Their wearied wings from all the skirts of war.
Battalion'd infantry and squadron'd horse
Dash the silk tassel and the golden torse;
Flags from the forts and ensigns from the fleet
Roll in the dust and at Columbia's feet
Prostrate the pride of thrones; they firm the base
Of freedom's temple, while her arms they grace.
Here Albion's crimson Cross the soil o'erspreads,
Her Lion crouches and her Thistle fades;

Indignant Erin rues her trampled Lyre,
Brunswick's pale Steed forgets his foamy fire,
Proud Hessia's Castle lies in dust o'erthrown,
And venal Anspach quits her broken Crown.
  Long trains of wheel'd artillery shade the shore,
Quench their blue matches and forget to roar;
Along the incumber'd plain, thick planted rise
High stacks of muskets glittering to the skies,
Numerous and vast. As when the toiling swains
Heap their whole harvest on the stubbly plains;
Gerb after gerb the bearded shock expands,
Shocks, ranged in rows, hill high the burden'd lands;
The joyous master numbers all the piles
And o'er his well earn'd crop complacent smiles;
Such growing heaps this iron harvest yield,
So tread the victors this their final field.
  Triumphant Washington with brow serene,
Regards unmoved the exhilarating scene,
Weighs in his balanced thought the silent grief
That sinks the bosom of the fallen chief,
With all the joy that laurel crowns bestow,
A world reconquer'd and a vanquisht foe.

Thus thro extremes of life, in every state,
Shines the clear soul, beyond all fortune great,
While smaller minds, the dupes of fickle chance,
Slight woes o'erwhelm and sudden joys entrance.
So the full sun, thro all the changing sky,
Nor blasts nor overpowers the naked eye;
Tho transient splendors borrow'd from his light,
Glance on the mirror and destroy the sight.
He bids brave Lincoln guide with modest air,
The last glad triumph of the finisht war,
Who sees, once more, two armies shade one plain,
The mighty victors and the captive train.

COLUMBIAD.

BOOK VIII.

ARGUMENT.

Hymn to Peace. Eulogy on the heroes slain in the war, in which the Author finds occasion to mention his Brother. Address to the patriots who have survived the conflict; exhorting them to preserve the liberty they have established. The danger of losing it by inattention illustrated in the rape of the Golden Fleece. Freedom succeeding to Despotism in the moral world, like Order succeeding to Chaos in the physical world. Atlas, the guardian Genius of Africa, denounces to Hesper the crimes of his people in the slavery of the Africans The Author addresses his countrymen on that subject and on the principles of their government.

Hesper, recurring to his object of showing Columbus the importance of his discoveries, reverses the order of time, and exhibits the continent again in its savage state. He then displays the progress of arts in America. Fur trade. Fisheries. Productions. Commerce. Education. Philosophical discoveries. Painting. Poetry.

COLUMBIAD.

BOOK VIII.

Hail holy Peace, from thy sublime abode
Mid circling saints that grace the throne of God.
Before his arm, around our embryon earth,
Stretcht the dim void and gave to nature birth,
Ere morning stars his glowing chambers hung,
Or songs of gladness woke an angel's tongue,
Veil'd in the splendors of his beamful mind,
In blest repose thy placid form reclined,
Lived in his life, his inward sapience caught,
And traced and toned his universe of thought.
Borne thro the expanse with his creating voice
Thy presence bade the unfolding worlds rejoice,

Led forth the systems on their bright career,
Shaped all their curves and fashion'd every sphere,
Spaced out their suns, and round each radiant goal,
Orb over orb, compell'd their train to roll,
Bade heaven's own harmony their force combine,
Taught all their host symphonious strains to join,
Gave to seraphic harps their sounding lays,
Their joys to angels and to men their praise.

From scenes of blood, these verdant shores that stain,
From numerous friends in recent battle slain,
From blazing towns that scorch the purple sky,
From houseless hordes, their smoking walls that fly,
From the black prison ships, those groaning graves,
From warring fleets that vex the gory waves,
From a storm'd world, long taught thy flight to mourn,
I rise, delightful Peace, and greet thy glad return.

For now the untuneful trump shall grate no more;
Ye silver streams, no longer swell with gore,
Bear from your war-beat banks the guilty stain
With yon retiring navies to the main.
While other views unfolding on my eyes
And happier themes bid bolder numbers rise;

Bring, bounteous Peace, in thy celestial throng,
Life to my soul and rapture to my song;
Give me to trace, with pure unclouded ray,
The arts and virtues that attend thy sway,
To see thy blissful charms, that here descend,
Thro distant realms and endless years extend.
  Too long the groans of death and battle's bray
Have rung discordant thro my turgid lay:
The drum's rude clang, the war wolf's hideous howl
Convulsed my nerves and agonized my soul,
Untuned the harp for all but misery's pains
And chased the Muse from corse-incumber'd plains.
Let memory's balm its pious fragrance shed
On heroes' wounds and patriot warriors dead;
Accept, departed Shades, these grateful sighs,
Your fond attendants thro your homeward skies.
  And thou, my earliest friend, my Brother dear,
Thy fall untimely still renews my tear.
In youthful sports, in toils, in taste allied,
My kind companion and my faithful guide,
When death's dread summons, from our infant eyes,
Had call'd our last loved parent to the skies.

Tho young in arms and still obscure thy name,
Thy bosom panted for the deeds of fame;
Beneath Montgomery's eye, when by thy steel
In northern wilds the frequent savage fell.
Fired by his voice and foremost at his call
To mount the breach or scale the flamy wall,
Thy daring hand had many a laurel gain'd,
If years had ripen'd what thy fancy feign'd.
Lamented Youth! when thy great leader bled,
Thro the same wound thy parting spirit fled,
Join'd the long train, the self-devoted band,
The gods, the saviors, of their native land.

On fame's high pinnacle their names shall shine,
Unending ages greet the group divine,
Whose holy hands our banners first unfurl'd
And conquer'd freedom for the grateful world.

And you, their peers, whose steel avenged their blood,
Whose breasts with theirs our sacred rampart stood,
Illustrious relics of a thousand fields!
To you at last the foe reluctant yields.
But tho the Muse, too prodigal of praise,
Dares with the dead your living worth to raise,

Think not, my friends, the patriot's task is done,
Or Freedom safe, because the battle's won.
Unnumber'd foes, far different arms that wield,
Wait the weak moment when she quits her shield,
To plunge in her bold breast the insidious dart
Or pour keen poison round her thoughtless heart.
Perhaps they 'll strive her votaries to divide,
From their own veins to draw the vital tide;
Perhaps, by cooler calculation shown,
Create materials to construct a throne,
Dazzle her guardians with the glare of state,
Corrupt with power, with borrow'd pomp inflate,
Bid thro the land the soft infection creep,
Whelm all her sons in one lethargic sleep,
Crush her vast empire in its brilliant birth
And chase the goddess from the ravaged earth.
  The dragon thus, that watcht the Colchian fleece,
Foil'd the fierce warriors of wide plundering Greece;
Warriors of matchless might and wondrous birth,
Jove's sceptred sons and demigods of earth.
High on the sacred tree, the glittering prize
Hangs o'er its guard and fires the warriors' eyes;

First their hurl'd spears his spiral folds assail,
Their spears fall pointless from his flaky mail;
Onward with dauntless swords they plunge amain;
He shuns their blows, recoils his twisting train,
Darts forth his forky tongue, heaves high in air
His fiery crest and sheds a hideous glare,
Champs, churns his poisonous juice, and hissing loud
Spouts thick the stifling tempest o'er the crowd;
Then, with one sweep of convoluted train,
Rolls back all Greece and besoms wide the plain
O'erturns the sons of gods, dispersing far
The pirate horde, and closes quick the war.
From his red jaws tremendous triumph roars,
Dark Euxine trembles to its distant shores,
Proud Jason starts confounded in his might,
Leads back his peers and dares no more the fight.
But the sly Priestess brings her opiate spell,
Soft charms that hush the triple hound of hell,
Bids Orpheus tune his all enchanting lyre
And join to calm the guardian's sleepless ire.
Soon from the tepid ground blue vapors rise,
And sounds melodious move along the skies;

A settling tremor thro his folds extends,
His crest contracts, his rainbow neck unbends,
O'er all his hundred hoops the languor crawls,
Each curve develops, every volute falls,
His broad back flattens as he spreads the plain,
And sleep consigns him to his lifeless reign.
Flusht at the sight the pirates seize the spoil,
And ravaged Colchis rues the insidious toil.

Yes! fellow freemen, sons of high renown,
Chant your loud peans, weave your civic crown;
But know, the goddess you've so long adored,
Tho now she scabbards your avenging sword,
Calls you to vigilance, to manlier cares,
To prove in peace the men she proved in wars:
Superior task! severer test of soul!
Tis here bold virtue plays her noblest role
And merits most of praise. The warrior's name,
Tho peal'd and chimed on all the tongues of fame,
Sounds less harmonious to the grateful mind
Than his who fashions and improves mankind.

And what high meed your new vocation waits!
Freedom, parturient with a hundred states,

Confides them to your hand; the nascent prize
Claims all your care, your soundest wisdom tries.
Ah nurture, temper, train your infant charge,
Its force develop and its life enlarge,
Unfold each day some adolescent grace,
Some right recognise or some duty trace;
Mold a fair model for the realms of earth,
Call moral nature to a second birth,
Reach, renovate the world's great social plan
And here commence the sober sense of man.
  For lo in other climes and elder states
What strange inversion all his works awaits!
From age to age, on every peopled shore,
Stalks the fell Demon of despotic power,
Sweeps in his march the mounds of art away,
Blots with his breath the trembling disk of day,
Treads down whole nations every stride he takes
And wraps their labors in his fiery flakes.
  As Anarch erst around his regions hurl'd
The wrecks, long crusht of time's anterior world;
While nature mourn'd, in wild confusion tost,
Her suns extinguisht and her systems lost,

Light, life and instinct shared the dreary trance,
And gravitation fled the field of chance;
No laws remain'd of matter, motion, space;
Time lost his count, the universe his place;
Till Order came in her cerulean robes
And launcht and rein'd the renovated globes,
Stockt with harmonious worlds the vast Inane,
Archt her new heaven and fixt her boundless reign:
So kings convulse the moral frame, the base
Of all the codes that can accord the race;
And so from their broad grasp, their deadly ban,
Tis yours to snatch this earth, to raise regenerate man.
My friends, I love your fame; I joy to raise
The high toned anthem of my country's praise;
To sing her victories, virtues, wisdom, weal,
Boast with loud voice the patriot pride I feel;
Warm wild I sing; and, to her failings blind,
Mislead myself, perhaps mislead mankind.
Land that I love! is this the whole we owe?
Thy pride to pamper, thy fair face to show;
Dwells there no blemish where such glories shine?
And lurks no spot in that bright sun of thine?

Hark! a dread voice, with heaven-astounding strain,
Swells like a thousand thunders o'er the main,
Rolls and reverberates around thy hills,
And Hesper's heart with pangs paternal fills.
Thou hearst him not; tis Atlas, throned sublime,
Great brother guardian of old Afric's clime;
High o'er his coast he rears his frowning form,
O'erlooks and calms his sky-borne fields of storm,
Flings off the clouds that round his shoulders hung
And breaks from clogs of ice his trembling tongue;
While far thro space with rage and grief he glares,
Heaves his hoar head and shakes the heaven he bears:
—Son of my sire! Oh latest brightest birth
That sprang from his fair spouse, prolific earth!
Great Hesper, say what sordid ceaseless hate
Impels thee thus to mar my elder state?
Our sire assign'd thee thy more glorious reign,
Secured and bounded by our laboring main;
That main (tho still my birthright name it bear)
Thy sails o'ershadow, thy brave children share;
I grant it thus; while air surrounds the ball,
Let breezes blow, let oceans roll for all.

But thy proud sons, a strange ungenerous race,
Enslave my tribes, and each fair world disgrace,
Provoke wide vengeance on their lawless land,
The bolt ill placed in thy forbearing hand.—
Enslave my tribes! then boast their cantons free,
Preach faith and justice, bend the sainted knee,
Invite all men their liberty to share,
Seek public peace, defy the assaults of war,
Plant, reap, consume, enjoy their fearless toil,
Tame their wild floods to fatten still their soil,
Enrich all nations with their nurturing store
And rake with venturous fluke each wondering shore.—
Enslave my tribes! what, half mankind imban,
Then read, expound, enforce the rights of man!
Prove plain and clear how nature's hand of old
Cast all men equal in her human mold!
Their fibres, feelings, reasoning powers the same,
Like wants await them, like desires inflame.
Thro former times with learned book they tread,
Revise past ages and rejudge the dead,
Write, speak, avenge, for ancient sufferings feel,
Impale each tyrant on their pens of steel,

Declare how freemen can a world create,
And slaves and masters ruin every state.—
Enslave my tribes! and think, with dumb disdain,
To scape this arm and prove my vengeance vain!
But look! methinks beneath my foot I ken
A few chain'd things that seem no longer men;
Thy sons perchance! whom Barbary's coast can tell
The sweets of that loved scourge they wield so well.
Link'd in a line, beneath the driver's goad,
See how they stagger with their lifted load;
The shoulder'd rock, just wrencht from off my hill
And wet with drops their straining orbs distil,
Galls, grinds them sore, along the rampart led,
And the chain clanking counts the steps they tread.
By night close bolted in the bagnio's gloom,
Think how they ponder on their dreadful doom,
Recal the tender sire, the weeping bride,
The home, far sunder'd by a waste of tide,
Brood all the ties that once endear'd them there,
But now, strung stronger, edge their keen despair.
Till here a fouler fiend arrests their pace:
Plague, with his burning breath and bloated face,

With saffron eyes that thro the dungeon shine,
And the black tumors bursting from the groin,
Stalks o'er the slave; who, cowering on the sod,
Shrinks from the Demon and invokes his God,
Sucks hot contagion with his quivering breath
And rackt with rending torture sinks in death.

Nor shall these pangs atone the nation's crime;
Far heavier vengeance, in the march of time,
Attends them still; if still they dare debase
And hold inthrall'd the millions of my race;
A vengeance that shall shake the world's deep frame,
That heaven abhors and hell might shrink to name.
Nature, long outraged, delves the crusted sphere
And molds the mining mischief dark and drear;
Europa too the penal shock shall find,
The rude soul-selling monsters of mankind.
Where Alps and Andes at their bases meet,
In earth's mid caves to lock their granite feet,
Heave their broad spines, expand each breathing lobe
And with their massy members rib the globe,
Her cauldron'd floods of fire their blast prepare;
Her wallowing womb of subterranean war

Waits but the fissure that my wave shall find,
To force the foldings of the rocky rind,
Crash your curst continent, and whirl on high
The vast avulsion vaulting thro the sky,
Fling far the bursting fragments, scattering wide
Rocks, mountains, nations o'er the swallowing tide.
Plunging and surging with alternate sweep,
They storm the day-vault and lay bare the deep,
Toss, tumble, plow their place, then slow subside,
And swell each ocean as their bulk they hide;
Two oceans dasht in one! that climbs and roars,
And seeks in vain the exterminated shores,
The deep drencht hemisphere. Far sunk from day,
It crumbles, rolls, it churns the settling sea,
Turns up each prominence, heaves every side,
To pierce once more the landless length of tide;
Till some poised Pambamarca looms at last
A dim lone island in the watery waste,
Mourns all his minor mountains wreckt and hurl'd,
Stands the sad relic of a ruin'd world,
Attests the wrath our mother kept in store
And rues her judgments on the race she bore.

No saving Ark around him rides the main,
Nor Dove weak-wing'd her footing finds again;
His own bald eagle skims alone the sky,
Darts from all points of heaven her searching eye,
Kens thro the gloom her ancient rock of rest
And finds her cavern'd crag, her solitary nest.

Thus toned the Titan his tremendous knell
And lasht his ocean to a loftier swell;
Earth groans responsive and with laboring woes
Leans o'er the surge and stills the storm he throws.

Fathers and friends, I know the boding fears
Of angry genii and of rending spheres
Assail not souls like yours; whom science bright
Thro shadowy nature leads with surer light;
For whom she strips the heavens of love and hate,
Strikes from Jove's hand the brandisht bolt of fate,
Gives each effect its own indubious cause,
Divides her moral from her physic laws,
Shows where the virtues find their nurturing food,
And men their motives to be just and good.
You scorn the Titan's threat; nor shall I strain
The powers of pathos in a task so vain

As Afric's wrongs to sing; for what avails
To harp for you these known familiar tales;
To tongue mute misery, and re-rack the soul
With crimes oft copied from that bloody scroll
Where Slavery pens her woes? tho tis but there
We learn the weight that mortal life can bear.
The tale might startle still the accustom'd ear
Still shake the nerve that pumps the pearly tear,
Melt every heart and thro the nation gain
Full many a voice to break the barbarous chain.
But why to sympathy for guidance fly,
(Her aids uncertain and of scant supply)
When your own self-excited sense affords
A guide more sure, and every sense accords?
Where strong self-interest join'd with duty lies,
Where doing right demands no sacrifice,
Where profit, pleasure, life-expanding fame
League their allurements to support the claim,
Tis safest there the impleaded cause to trust;
Men well instructed will be always just.
From slavery then your rising realms to save,
Regard the master, notice not the slave;

Consult alone for freemen, and bestow
Your best, your only cares to keep them so.
Tyrants are never free; and small and great,
All masters must be tyrants soon or late;
So nature works; and oft the lordling knave
Turns out at once a tyrant and a slave,
Struts, cringes, bullies, begs, as courtiers must,
Makes one a god, another treads in dust,
Fears all alike and filches whom he can,
But knows no equal, finds no friend in man.
  Ah, would you not be slaves, with lords and kings,
Then be not masters; there the danger springs.
The whole crude system that torments this earth,
Of rank, privation, privilege of birth,
False honor, fraud, corruption, civil jars,
The rage of conquest and the curse of wars,
Pandora's total shower, all ills combined
That erst o'erwhelm'd and still distress mankind,
Boxt up secure in your deliberate hand,
Wait your behest to fix or fly this land.
  Equality of Right is nature's plan;
And following nature is the march of man.

Whene'er he deviates in the least degree,
When, free himself, he would be more than free,
The baseless column, rear'd to bear his bust,
Falls as he mounts and whelms him in the dust.
  See Rome's rude sires, with autocratic gait,
Tread down their tyrant and erect their state;
Their state secured, they deem it wise and brave
That every freeman should command a slave,
And, flusht with franchise of his camp and town,
Rove thro the world and hunt the nations down;
Master and man the same vile spirit gains,
Rome chains the world and wears herself the chains.
  Mark modern Europe with her feudal codes,
Serfs, villains, vassals, nobles, kings and gods,
All slaves of different grades, corrupt and curst
With high and low, for senseless rank athirst,
Wage endless wars; not fighting to be free,
But cujum pecus, whose base herd they 'll be.
  Too much of Europe, here transplanted o'er,
Nursed feudal feelings on your tented shore,
Brought sable serfs from Afric, call'd it gain,
And urged your sires to forge the fatal chain.

But now, the tents o'erturn'd, the war dogs fled,
Now fearless Freedom rears at last her head
Matcht with celestial Peace,—my friends, beware
To shade the splendors of so bright a pair;
Complete their triumph, fix their firm abode,
Purge all privations from your liberal code,
Restore their souls to men, give earth repose
And save your sons from slavery, wars and woes.
  Based on its rock of right your empire lies,
On walls of wisdom let the fabric rise;
Preserve your principles, their force unfold,
Let nations prove them and let kings behold.
EQUALITY, your first firm-grounded stand;
Then FREE ELECTION; then your FEDERAL BAND;
This holy Triad should for ever shine
The great compendium of all rights divine,
Creed of all schools, whence youths by millions draw
Their themes of right, their decalogues of law;
Till men shall wonder (in these codes inured)
How wars were made, how tyrants were endured.
  Then shall your works of art superior rise,
Your fruits perfume a larger length of skies,

Canals careering climb your sunbright hills,
Vein the green slopes and strow their nurturing rills,
Thro tunnel'd heights and sundering ridges glide,
Rob the rich west of half Kenhawa's tide,
Mix your wide climates, all their stores confound
And plant new ports in every midland mound.
Your lawless Missisippi, now who slimes
And drowns and desolates his waste of climes,
Ribb'd with your dikes, his torrent shall restrain
And ask your leave to travel to the main;
Won from his wave while rising cantons smile,
Rear their glad nations and reward their toil.

Thus Nile's proud flood to human hands of yore
Raised and resign'd his tide-created shore,
Call'd from his Ethiop hills their hardy swains
And waved their harvest o'er his newborn plains;
Earth's richest realm from his tamed current sprung;
There nascent science toned her infant tongue,
Taught the young arts their tender force to try,
To state the seasons and unfold the sky;
Till o'er the world extended and refined,
They rule the destinies of humankind.

Now had Columbus well enjoy'd the sight
Of armies vanquisht and of fleets in flight,
From all Hesperia's heaven the darkness flown,
And colon crowds to sovereign sages grown.
To cast new glories o'er the changing clime,
The guardian Power reversed the flight of time,
Roll'd back the years that led their course before,
Stretcht out immense the wild uncultured shore;
Then shifts the total scene and rears to view
Arts and the men that useful arts pursue.
As o'er the canvas when the painter's mind
Glows with a future landscape well design'd,
While Panorama's wondrous aid he calls
To crowd whole realms within his circling walls,
Lakes, fields and forests, ports and navies rise,
A new creation to his kindling eyes;
He smiles o'er all; and in delightful strife
The pencil moves and calls the whole to life.
So while Columbia's patriarch stood sublime
And saw rude nature clothe the trackless clime;
The green banks heave, the winding currents pour,
The bays and harbors cleave the yielding shore,

The champaigns spread, the solemn groves arise
And the rough mountains lengthen round the skies;
Thro all their bounds he traced with skilful ken
The unform'd seats and future walks of men;
Markt where the field should bloom, the pennon play,
Great cities grow and empires claim their sway;
When, sudden waked by Hesper's waving hand,
They rose obedient round the cultured land.

In western tracts, where still the wildmen tread,
From sea to sea an inland commerce spread;
On the dim streams and thro the gloomy grove
The trading bands their cumbrous burdens move;
Furs, peltry, drugs, and all the native store
Of midland realms descended to the shore.

Where summer suns, along the northern coast,
With feeble force dissolve the chains of frost,
Prolific waves the scaly nations trace
And tempt the toils of man's laborious race.
Tho rich Brazilian strands, beneath the tide,
Their shells of pearl and sparkling pebbles hide,
While for the gaudy prize, a venturous train
Plunge the dark deep and brave the surging main,

Drag forth the shining gewgaws into air
To stud a sceptre or emblaze a star;
Far wealthier stores these genial tides display,
And works less dangerous with their spoils repay.
The Hero saw the hardy crews advance,
Cast the long line and aim the barbed lance,
Load the deep floating barks and bear abroad
To every land the life-sustaining food;
Renascent swarms by nature's care supplied,
Repeople still the shoals and fin the fruitful tide.
Where southern streams thro broad savannas bend,
The rice-clad vales their verdant rounds extend;
Tobago's plant its leaf expanding yields,
The maiz luxuriant clothes a thousand fields;
Steeds, herds and flocks o'er northern regions rove,
Imbrown the hill and wanton thro the grove.
The woodlands wild their sturdy honors bend,
The pines, the liveoaks to the shores descend,
There couch the keels, the crooked ribs arise,
Hulls heave aloft and mastheads mount the skies;
Launcht on the deep o'er every wave they fly,
Feed tropic isles and Europe's looms supply.

To nurse the arts and fashion freedom's lore
Young schools of science rise along the shore;
Great without pomp their modest walls expand,
Harvard and Yale and Princeton grace the land,
Penn's student halls his youths with gladness greet,
On James's bank Virginian Muses meet,
Manhattan's mart collegiate domes command,
Bosom'd in groves, see growing Dartmouth stand;
Bright o'er its realm reflecting solar fires,
On yon tall hill Rhode Island's seat aspires.
Thousands of humbler name around them rise,
Where homebred freemen seize the solid prize;
Fixt in small spheres, with safer beams to shine,
They reach the useful and refuse the fine,
Found, on its proper base, the social plan,
The broad plain truths, the common sense of man,
His obvious wants, his mutual aids discern,
His rights familiarize, his duties learn,
Feel moral fitness all its force dilate,
Embrace the village and comprise the state.
Each rustic here who turns the furrow'd soil,
The maid, the youth that ply mechanic toil,

In equal rights, in useful arts inured,
Know their just claims and see their claims secured;
They watch their delegates, each law revise,
Its faults designate and its merits prize,
Obey, but scrutinize; and let the test
Of sage experience prove and fix the best.
  Here, fired by virtue's animating flame,
The preacher's task persuasive sages claim,
To mold religion to the moral mind,
In bands of peace to harmonize mankind,
To life, to light, to promised joys above
The soften'd soul with ardent hope to move.
No dark intolerance blinds the zealous throng,
No arm of power attendant on their tongue;
Vext Inquisition with her flaming brand
Shuns their mild march nor dares approach the land.
Tho different creeds their priestly robes denote,
Their orders various and their rites remote,
Yet one their voice, their labors all combined,
Lights of the world and friends of humankind.
So the bright galaxy o'er heaven displays
Of various stars the same unbounded blaze;

Where great and small their mingling rays unite,
And earth and skies exchange the friendly light.
And lo, my son, that other sapient band,
The torch of science flaming in their hand!
Thro nature's range their searching souls aspire
Or wake to life the canvas and the lyre.
Fixt in sublimest thought, behold them rise
World after world unfolding to their eyes,
Lead, light, allure them thro the total plan
And give new guidance to the paths of man.
Yon meteor-mantled hill see Franklin tread,
Heaven's awful thunders rolling o'er his head;
Convolving clouds the billowy skies deform,
And forky flames emblaze the blackening storm.
See the descending streams around him burn,
Glance on his rod and with his finger turn;
He bids conflicting fulminants expire
The guided blast, and holds the imprison'd fire.
No more, when doubling storms the vault o'erspread,
The livid glare shall strike thy race with dread,
Nor towers nor temples shuddering with the sound
Sink in the flames and shake the sheeted ground.

His well tried wires, that every tempest wait,
Shall teach mankind to ward the bolts of fate,
With pointed gold o'ertop the trembling spire
And lead from untoucht walls the harmless fire;
Fill'd with his fame while distant climes rejoice,
Wherever lightning shines or thunder rears its voice.
And see sage Rittenhouse with ardent eye
Lift the long tube and pierce the starry sky;
Clear in his view the circling planets roll,
And suns and satellites their course control.
He marks what laws the widest wanderers bind,
Copies creation in his forming mind,
Sees in his hall the total semblance rise,
And mimics there the labors of the skies.
There student youths without their tubes behold
The spangled heavens their mystic maze unfold,
And crowded schools their cheerful chambers grace
With all the spheres that cleave the vast of space.
To guide the sailor in his wandering way
See Godfrey's glass (44) reverse the beams of day.
His lifted quadrant to the eye displays
From adverse skies the counteracting rays;

And marks, as devious sails bewilder'd roll,
Each nice gradation from the stedfast pole.
West (45) with his own great soul the canvas warms,
Creates, inspires, impassions human forms,
Spurns critic rules, and seizing safe the heart,
Breaks down the former frightful bounds of Art;
Where ancient manners, with exclusive reign,
From half mankind withheld her fair domain.
He calls to life each patriot, chief or sage,
Garb'd in the dress and drapery of his age.
Again bold Regulus to death returns,
Again her falling Wolfe Britannia mourns;
La Hogue, Boyne, Cressy, Nevilcross demand
And gain fresh lustre from his copious hand;
His Lear stalks wild with woes, the gods defies,
Insults the tempest and outstorms the skies;
Edward in arms to frowning combat moves,
Or won to pity by the queen he loves,
Spares the devoted Six, whose deathless deed
Preserves the town his vengeance doom'd to bleed
With rival force, see Copley's pencil trace
The air of action and the charms of face.

Fair in his tints unfold the scenes of state,
The senate listens and the peers debate;
Pale consternation every heart appals,
In act to speak, when death-struck Chatham falls.
He bids dread Calpe cease to shake the waves,
While Elliott's arm the host of Bourbon saves;
O'er sail-wing'd batteries sinking in the flood,
Mid flames and darkness, drencht in hostile blood,
Britannia's sons extend their generous hand
To rescue foes from death and bear them to the land.
Fired with the martial deeds that bathed in gore
His brave companions on his native shore,
Trumbull with daring hand their fame recals;
He shades with night Quebec's beleaguer'd walls,
Thro flashing flames, that midnight war supplies,
The assailants yield, their great Montgomery dies.
On Bunker height, thro floods of hostile fire,
His Putnam toils till all the troops retire,
His Warren, pierced with balls, at last lies low
And leaves a victory to the wasted foe.
Britannia too his glowing tint shall claim,
To pour new splendor on her Calpean fame;

He leads her bold sortie and from their towers
O'erturns the Gallic and Iberian powers.
  See rural seats of innocence and ease,
High tufted towers and walks of waving trees,
The white waves dashing on the craggy shores,
Meandering streams and meads of mingled flowers,
Where nature's sons their wild excursions tread,
In just design from Taylor's pencil spread.
  Stuart and Brown the moving portrait raise,
Each rival stroke the force of life conveys;
Heroes and beauties round their tablets stand
And rise unfading from their plastic hand;
Each breathing form preserves its wonted grace,
And all the soul stands speaking in the face.
  Two kindred hearts the swelling statue heave,
Wake the dead wax and teach the stone to live.
While the bold chissel claims the rugged strife
To rouse the sceptred marble into life,
See Wright's fair hands the livelier fire control,
In waxen forms she breathes impassion'd soul;
The pencil'd tint o'er molded substance glows,
And different powers the peerless art compose.

Grief, rage and fear beneath her fingers start,
Roll the wild eye and pour the bursting heart;
The world's dead fathers wait her wakening call,
And distant ages fill the storied hall.

To equal fame ascends thy tuneful throng,
The boast of genius and the pride of song;
Caught from the cast of every age and clime,
Their lays shall triumph o'er the lapse of time.

With lynx-eyed glance thro nature far to pierce,
With all the powers and every charm of verse,
Each science opening in his ample mind,
His fancy glowing and his taste refined,
See Trumbull lead the train. His skilful hand
Hurls the keen darts of satire round the land.
Pride, knavery, dulness feel his mortal stings,
And listening virtue triumphs while he sings;
Britain's foil'd sons, victorious now no more,
In guilt retiring from the wasted shore,
Strive their curst cruelties to hide in vain;
The world resounds them in his deathless strain.

On wings of faith to elevate the soul
Beyond the bourn of earth's benighted pole,

For Dwight's high harp the epic Muse sublime
Hails her new empire in the western clime.
Tuned from the tones by seers seraphic sung,
Heaven in his eye and rapture on his tongue,
His voice revives old Canaan's promised land,
The long-fought fields of Jacob's chosen band.
In Hanniel's fate, proud faction finds its doom,
Ai's midnight flames light nations to their tomb,
In visions bright supernal joys are given
And all the dark futurities of heaven.

While freedom's cause his patriot bosom warms,
In counsel sage nor inexpert in arms,
See Humphreys glorious from the field retire,
Sheathe the glad sword and string the soothing lyre;
That lyre which erst, in hours of dark despair,
Roused the sad realms to finish well the war.
O'er fallen friends, with all the strength of woe,
Fraternal sighs in his strong numbers flow;
His country's wrongs, her duties, dangers, praise,
Fire his full soul and animate his lays:
Wisdom and War with equal joy shall own
So fond a votary and so brave a son.

THE

COLUMBIAD.

BOOK IX.

ARGUMENT.

Vision suspended. Night scene, as contemplated from the mount of vision. Columbus inquires the reason of the slow progress of science, and its frequent interruptions. Hesper answers, that all things in the physical, as well as the moral and intellectual world, are progressive in like manner. He traces their progress from the birth of the universe to the present state of the earth and its inhabitants; asserts the future advancement of society, till perpetual peace shall be established. Columbus proposes his doubts; alleges in support of them the successive rise and downfal of ancient nations; and infers future and periodical convulsions. Hesper, in answer, exhibits the great distinction between the ancient and modern state of the arts and of society. Crusades. Commerce. Hanseatic League. Copernicus. Kepler. Newton. Galileo. Herschel. Descartes. Bacon. Printing press. Magnetic Needle. Geographical discoveries. Federal system in America. A similar system to be extended over the whole earth. Columbus desires a view of this.

COLUMBIAD.

BOOK IX.

But now had Hesper from the Hero's sight
Veil'd the vast world with sudden shades of night.
Earth, sea and heaven, where'er he turns his eye,
Arch out immense, like one surrounding sky
Lampt with reverberant fires. The starry train
Paint their fresh forms beneath the placid main;
Fair Cynthia here her face reflected laves,
Bright Venus gilds again her natal waves,
The Bear redoubling foams with fiery joles,
And two dire Dragons twine two arctic poles.
Lights o'er the land, from cities lost in shade,
New constellations, new galaxies spread,

And each high pharos double flames provides,
One from its fires, one fainter from the tides.
  Centred sublime in this bivaulted sphere,
On all sides void, unbounded, calm and clear,
Soft o'er the Pair a lambent lustre plays,
Their seat still cheering with concentred rays;
To converse grave the soothing shades invite,
And on his guide Columbus fixt his sight:
Kind messenger of heaven, he thus began,
Why this progressive laboring search of man?
If men by slow degrees have power to reach
These opening truths that long dim ages teach,
If, school'd in woes and tortured on to thought,
Passion absorbing what experience taught,
Still thro the devious painful paths they wind
And to sound wisdom lead at last the mind,
Why did not bounteous nature at their birth
Give all their science to these sons of earth,
Pour on their reasoning powers pellucid day,
Their arts, their interests clear as light display?
That error, madness and sectarian strife
Might find no place to havoc human life.

To whom the guardian Power: To thee is given
To hold high converse and inquire of heaven,
To mark untraversed ages and to trace
Whate'er improves and what impedes thy race,
Know then, progressive are the paths we go
In worlds above thee, as in thine below.
Nature herself (whose grasp of time and place
Deals out duration and impalms all space)
Moves in progressive march; but where to tend,
What course to compass, how the march must end,
Her sons decide not; yet her works we greet
Imperfect in their parts, but in their whole complete.
When erst her hand the crust of Chaos thirl'd
And forced from his black breast the bursting world,
High swell'd the huge existence crude and crass,
A formless dark impermeated mass;
No light nor heat nor cold nor moist nor dry,
But all concocting in their causes lie.
Millions of periods, such as these her spheres
Learn since to measure and to call their years,
She broods the mass; then into motion brings
And seeks and sorts the principles of things,

Pours in the attractive and repulsive force,
Whirls forth her globes in cosmogyral course,
By myriads and by millions, scaled sublime,
To scoop their skies and curve the rounds of time.
  She groups their systems, lots to each his place,
Strow'd thro immensity and drown'd in space,
All yet unseen; till light at last begun,
And every system found a centred sun,
Call'd to his neighbor and exchanged from far
His infant gleams with every social star;
Rays thwarting rays and skies o'erarching skies
Robed their dim planets with commingling dies,
Hung o'er each heaven their living lamps serene
And tinged with blue the frore expanse between:
Then joyous Nature hail'd the golden morn,
Drank the young beam, beheld her empire born.
  Lo the majestic movement! there they trace
Their blank infinitudes of time and space,
Vault with careering curves her central goal,
Pour forth her day and stud her evening stole,
Heedless of count; their numbers still unknown,
Unmeasured still their progress round her throne;

For none of all her firstborn sons, endow'd
With heavenly sapience and pretensions proud,
No seraph bright, whose keen considering eye
And sunbeam speed ascend from sky to sky,
Has yet explored or counted all their spheres
Or fixt or found their past record of years.
Nor can a ray from her remotest sun,
Shot forth when first their splendid morn begun,
Borne straight, continuous thro the void of space,
Doubling each thousand years its rapid pace
And hither posting, yet have reacht this earth,
To bring the tidings of its master's birth.
  And mark thy native orb! tho later born,
Tho still unstored with light her silver horn,
As seen from sister planets, who repay
Far more than she their borrow'd streams of day,
Yet what an age her shell rock ribs attest!
Her sparry spines, her coal-incumber'd breast!
Millions of generations toil'd and died
To crust with coral and to salt her tide,
And millions more, ere yet her soil began,
Ere yet she form'd or could have nursed her man.

Then rose the proud phenomenon, the birth
Most richly wrought, the favorite child of earth;
But frail at first his frame, with nerves ill strung,
Unform'd his footsteps, long untoned his tongue,
Unhappy, unassociate , unrefined,
Unfledged the pinions of his lofty mind,
He wander'd wild, to every beast a prey,
More prest with wants and feebler far than they;
For countless ages forced from place to place,
Just reproduced but scarce preserved his race.
At last, a soil more fixt and streams more sweet
Inform the wretched migrant where to seat;
Euphrates' flowery banks begin to smile,
Fruits fringe the Ganges, gardens grace the Nile;
Nile, ribb'd with dikes, a length of coast creates,
And giant Thebes begins her hundred gates,
Mammoth of human works! her grandeur known
These thousand lustres by its wrecks alone;
Wrecks that humiliate still all modern states,
Press the poised earth with their enormous weights,
Refuse to quit their place, dissolve their frame
And trust, like Ilion, to the bards their fame.

Memphis amass'd her piles, that still o'erclimb
The clouds of heaven and task the tooth of time;
Belus and Brama tame their vagrant throngs,
And Homer, with his monumental songs,
Builds far more durable his splendid throne
Than all the Pharaohs with their hills of stone.

High roll'd the round of years that hung sublime
These wondrous beacons in the night of time;
Studs of renown! that to thine eyes attest
The waste of ages that beyond them rest;
Ages how fill'd with toils! how gloom'd with woes!
Trod with all steps that man's long march compose,
Dim drear disastrous; ere his foot could gain
A height so brilliant o'er the bestial train.

In those blank periods, where no man can trace
The gleams of thought that first illumed his race,
His errors, twined with science, took their birth
And forged their fetters for this child of earth.
And when, as oft, he dared expand his view
And work with nature on the line she drew,
Some monster, gender'd in his fears, unmann'd
His opening soul and marr'd the works he plann'd.

Fear, the first passion of his helpless state,
Redoubles all the woes that round him wait,
Blocks nature's path and sends him wandering wide,
Without a guardian and without a guide.
Beat by the storm, refresht by gentle rain,
By sunbeams cheer'd or foundered in the main,
He bows to every force he can't control,
Endows them all with intellect and soul,
With passions various, turbulent and strong,
Rewarding virtue and avenging wrong,
Gives heaven and earth to their supernal doom
And swells their sway beyond the closing tomb.
Hence rose his gods, that mystic monstrous lore
Of blood-stain'd altars and of priestly power,
Hence blind credulity on all dark things,
False morals hence and hence the yoke of kings.
Yon starry vault that round him rolls the spheres
And gives to earth her seasons, days and years,
The source designates and the clue imparts
Of all his errors and of all his arts.
There spreads the system that his ardent thought
First into emblems, then to spirits wrought;

Spirits that ruled all matter and all mind,
Nourisht or famisht, kill'd or cured mankind,
Bade him neglect the soil whereon he fed,
Work with hard hand for that which was not bread,
Erect the temple, darken deep the shrine,
Yield the full hecatomb with awe divine,
Despise this earth and claim with lifted eyes
His health and harvest from the meteor'd skies.
Accustom'd thus to bow the suppliant head
And reverence powers that shake his heart with dread,
His pliant faith extends with easy ken
From heavenly hosts to heaven-anointed men;
The sword, the tripod join their mutual aids
To film his eyes with more impervious shades,
Create a sceptred idol and enshrine
The robber chief in attributes divine,
Arm the new phantom with the nation's rod
And hail the dreadful delegate of God.
Two settled slaveries thus the race control,
Engross their labors and debase their soul;
Till creeds and crimes and feuds and fears compose
The seeds of war and all its kindred woes.

Unfold, thou Memphian dungeon! there began
The lore of Mystery, the mask of man;
There fraud with science leagued, in early times,
Plann'd a resplendent course of holy crimes,
Stalkt o'er the nations with gigantic pace,
With sacred symbols charm'd the cheated race,
Taught them new grades of ignorance to gain
And punish truth with more than mortal pain,—
Unfold at last thy cope! that man may see
The mines of mischief he has drawn from thee.
—Wide gapes the porch with hieroglyphics hung,
And mimic zodiacs o'er its arches flung;
Close labyrinth'd here the feign'd Omniscient dwells,
Dupes from all nations seek the sacred cells;
Inquiring strangers, with astonisht eyes,
Dive deep to read these subterranean skies,
To taste that holiness which faith bestows
And fear promulgates thro its world of woes.
The bold Initiate takes his awful stand,
A thin pale taper trembling in his hand;
Thro hells of howling monsters lies the road,
To season souls and teach the ways of God.

Down the crampt corridor, far sunk from day,
On hands and bended knees he gropes his way,
Swims roaring streams, thro dens of serpents crawls,
Descends deep wells and clambers flaming walls;
Now thwart his lane a lake of sulphur gleams,
With fiery waves and suffocating steams;
He dares not shun the ford; for full in view
Fierce lions rush behind and force him thro.
Long ladders heaved on end, with banded eyes
He mounts, and mounts, and seems to gain the skies;
Then backward falling, tranced with deadly fright,
Finds his own feet and stands restored to light.
Here all dread sights of torture round him rise;
Lasht on a wheel, a whirling felon flies;
A wretch, with members chain'd and liver bare,
Writhes and disturbs the vulture feasting there;
One strains to roll his rock, recoiling still;
One, stretcht recumbent o'er a limpid rill,
Burns with devouring thirst; his starting eyes,
Swell'd veins and frothy lips and piercing cries
Accuse the faithless eddies, as they shrink
And keep him panting still, still bending o'er the brink.

At last Elysium to his ravisht eyes
Spreads flowery fields and opens golden skies;
Breathes Orphean music thro the dancing groves,
Trains the gay troops of beauties, graces, loves,
Lures his delirious sense with sweet decoys,
Fine fancied foretaste of eternal joys,
Fastidious pomp or proud imperial state,—
Illusions all, that pass the Ivory Gate!
Various and vast the fraudful drama grows,
Feign'd are the pleasures, as unfelt the woes;
Where sainted hierophants, with well taught mimes,
Play'd first the role for all succeeding times;
Which, vampt and varied as the clime required,
More trist or splendid, open or retired,
Forms local creeds, with multifarious lore,
Creates the god and bids the world adore.
Lo at the Lama's feet, as lord of all,
Age following age in dumb devotion fall;
The youthful god, mid suppliant kings enshrined,
Dispensing fate and ruling half mankind,
Sits with contorted limbs, a silent slave,
An early victim of a secret grave;

His priests by myriads famish every clime
And sell salvation in the tones they chime.
  See India's triad frame their blood-penn'd codes,
Old Ganges change his gardens for his gods,
Ask his own waves from their celestial hands,
And choke his channel with their sainted sands.
Mad with the mandates of their scriptured word,
And prompt to snatch from hell her dear dead lord,
The wife still blooming decks her sacred urns,
Mounts the gay pyre and with his body burns.
  Shrined in his golden fame the Delphian stands,
Shakes distant thrones and taxes unknown lands.
Kings, consuls, khans from earth's whole regions come,
Pour in their wealth and then inquire their doom;
Furious and wild the priestess rends her veil,
Sucks thro the sacred stool the maddening gale,
Starts, reddens, foams and screams and mutters loud,
Like a fell fiend, her oracles of God.
The dark enigma, by the pontiff scroll'd
In broken phrase, and close in parchment roll'd,
From his proud pulpit to the suppliant hurl'd,
Shall rive an empire and distract the world.

And where the mosque's dim arches bend on high,
Mecca's dead prophet mounts the mimic sky;
Pilgrims, imbanded strong for mutual aid,
Thro dangerous deserts that their faith has made,
Train their long caravans, and famisht come
To kiss the shrine and trembling touch the tomb,
By fire and sword the same fell faith extend
And howl their homilies to earth's far end.
Phenician altars reek with human gore,
Gods hiss from caverns or in cages roar,
Nile pours from heaven a tutelary flood,
And gardens grow (46) the vegetable god.
Two rival powers the magian faith inspire,
Primeval Darkness and immortal Fire;
Evil and good in these contending rise,
And each by turns the sovereign of the skies.
Sun, stars and planets round the earth behold
Their fanes of marble and their shrines of gold;
The sea, the grove, the harvest and the vine
Spring from their gods and claim a birth divine;
While heroes, kings and sages of their times,
Those gods on earth, are gods in happier climes;

Minos in judgment sits, and Jove in power,
And Odin's friends are feasted there with gore.
  Man is an infant still; and slow and late
Must form and fix his adolescent state,
Mature his manhood and at last behold
His reason ripen and his force unfold.
From that bright eminence he then shall cast
A look of wonder on his wanderings past,
Congratulate himself, and o'er the earth
Firm the full reign of peace predestined at his birth.
  So Hesper taught; and farther had pursued
A theme so grateful as a world renew'd;
But dubious thoughts disturb'd the Hero's breast,
Who thus with modest mien the Seer addrest:
Say, friend of man, in this unbounded range,
Where error vagrates and illusions change,
What hopes to see his baleful blunders cease,
And earth commence that promised age of peace?
Like a loose pendulum his mind is hung,
From wrong to wrong by ponderous passion swung,
It vibrates wide, and with unceasing flight
Sweeps all extremes and scorns the mean of right.

Tho in the times you trace he seems to gain
A steadier movement and a path more plain,
And tho experience will have taught him then
To mark some dangers, some delusions ken,
Yet who can tell what future shocks may spread
New shades of darkness round his lofty head,
Plunge him again in some broad gulf of woes,
Where long and oft he struggled, wreckt and rose.
What strides he took in those gigantic times
That sow'd with cities all his orient climes!
When earth's proud floods he tamed, made many a shore,
And talk'd with heaven from Babel's glittering tower!
Did not his Babylon exulting say,
I sit a queen, for ever stands my sway?
Thebes, Memphis, Nineveh, a countless throng,
Caught the same splendor and return'd the song,
Each boasted, promised o'er the world to rise,
Spouse of the sun, eternal as the skies.
Where shall we find them now? the very shore
Where Ninus rear'd his empire is no more:
The dikes decay'd, a putrid marsh regains,
The sunken walls, the tomb-incumber'd plains,

Pursues the dwindling nations where they shrink
And skirts with slime its deleterious brink.
The fox himself has fled his gilded den,
Nor holds the heritage he won from men;
Lapwing and reptile shun the curst abode,
And the foul dragon, now no more a god,
Trails off his train; the sickly raven flies;
A wide strong-stencht Avernus chokes the skies.
So pride and ignorance fall a certain prey
To the stanch bloodhound of despotic sway.
Then past a long drear night, with here and there
A doubtful glimmering from a single star;
Tyre, Carthage, Syracuse the gleam increase,
Till dawns at last the effulgent morn of Greece.
Here all his Muses meet, all arts combine
To nerve his genius and his works refine;
Morals and laws and arms and every grace
That e'er adorn'd or could exalt the race,
Wrought into science and arranged in rules,
Swell the proud splendor of her cluster'd schools,
Build and sustain the state with loud acclaim
And work those deathless miracles of fame

That stand unrival'd still; for who shall dare
Another field with Marathon compare?
Who speaks of eloquence or sacred song,
But calls on Greece to modulate his tongue?
And where has man's fine form so perfect shone
In tint or mold, in canvas or in stone?
Yet from that splendid height o'erturn'd, once more
He dasht in dust the living lamp he bore.
Dazzled with her own glare, decoy'd and sold
For homebred faction and barbaric gold,
Greece treads on Greece, subduing and subdued,
New crimes inventing, all the old renew'd,
Canton o'er canton climbs; till, crusht and broke,
All yield the sceptre and resume the yoke.
  Where shall we trace him next, the migrant man,
To try once more his meliorating plan?
Shall not the Macedonian, where he strides
O'er Asian worlds and Nile's neglected tides,
Prepare new seats of glory to repay
The transient shadows with perpetual day?
His heirs erect their empires and expand
The beams of Greece thro each benighted land;

Seleucia spreads o'er ten broad realms her sway
And turns on eastern climes the western ray;
Palmyra brightens earth's commercial zone
And sits an emblem of her god the sun;
While fond returning to that favorite shore
Where Ammon ruled and Hermes taught of yore,
All arts concentrate, force and grace combine
To rear and blend the useful with the fine,
Restore the Egyptian glories and retain,
Where science dawn'd, her great resurgent reign.
From Egypt chased again, he seeks his home,
More firmly fixt in sage considerate Rome.
Here all the virtues long resplendent shone,
All that was Greek, barbarian and her own;
She school'd him sound and boasted to extend
Thro time's long course and earth's remotest end
His glorious reign of reason; soon to cease
The clang of arms and rule the world in peace.
Great was the sense he gain'd and well defined
The various functions of his tutor'd mind;
Could but his sober sense have proved his guide,
And kind experience pruned the shoots of pride.

A field magnificent before him lay;
Land after land received the spreading ray;
Franchise and friendship travel'd in his train,
Bandits of earth and pirates of the main
Rose into citizens, their rage resign'd
And hail'd the great republic of mankind.
If ever then state slaughter was to pause,
And man from nature learn to frame his laws,
This was the moment; here the sunbeam rose
To hush the human storm and let the world repose.
But drunk with pomp and sickening at the light,
He stagger'd wild on this delirious height;
Forgot the plainest truths he learnt before,
And barter'd moral for material power.
From Calpe's rock to India's ardent skies,
O'er shuddering earth his talon'd Eagle flies,
To justice blind and heedless where she drove,
As when she bore the brandisht bolt of Jove.
Rome loads herself with chains, seals fast her eyes
And tells the insulted nations when to rise;
And rise they do, tempestuous in their sweep,
Swarm following swarm, o'ershading land and deep,

Roll back her outrage and indignant shed
The world's wide vengeance on her sevenfold head.
Then dwindling back to littleness and shade
Man soon forgets the gorgeous glare he made,
Sinks to a savage serf or monkish drone,
Roves in rude hordes or counts his beads alone,
Wars with his arts, obliterates his lore
And burns the books that rear'd his race before.
Shrouded in deeper darkness now he veers
The vast gyration of a thousand years,
Strikes out each lamp that would illume his way,
Disputes his food with every beast of prey;
Imbands his force to fence his trist abodes,
A wretched robber with his feudal codes.
At length, it seems, some parsimonious rays
Collect from each far heaven a feeble blaze,
Dance o'er his Europe and again excite
His numerous nations to receive the light.
But faint and slow the niggard dawn expands,
Diffused o'er various far dissunder'd lands,
Dreading, as well it may, to prove once more
The same sad chance so often proved before.

And why not lapse again? celestial seer,
Forgive my doubts and ah remove my fear!
Man is my brother; strong I feel the ties,
From strong solicitude my doubts arise;
My heart, while opening with the boundless scope
That swells before him and expands his hope,
Forebodes another fall; and tho at last
Thy world is planted and with light o'ercast,
Tho two broad continents their beams combine
Round his whole globe to stream his day divine,
Perchance some folly yet uncured may spread
A storm proportion'd to the lights they shed,
Veil both his continents and leave again
Between them stretcht the impermeable main;
All science buried, sails and cities lost,
Their lands uncultured, as their seas uncrost.
Till on thy coast, some thousand ages hence,
New pilots rise, bold enterprise commence,
Some new Columbus (happier let him be,
More wise and great and virtuous far than me)
Launch on the wave and tow'rd the rising day
Like a strong eaglet steer his untaught way,

Gird half the globe and to his age unfold
A strange new world, the world we call the old.
From Finland's glade to Calpe's storm-beat head
He 'll find some tribes of scattering wildmen spread;
But one vast wilderness will shade the soil,
No wreck of art, no sign of ancient toil
Tell where a city stood; nor leave one trace
Of all that honors now and all that shames the race.
If such the round we run, what hope, my friend,
To see our madness and our miseries end?—
Here paused the Patriarch: mild the Saint return'd,
And as he spoke, fresh glories round him burn'd:
My son, I blame not but applaud thy grief;
Inquiries deep should lead to slow belief.
So small the portion of the range of man
His written stories reach or views can span,
That wild confusion seems to clog his march,
And the dull progress made illudes thy search.
But broad beyond compare, with steadier hand
Traced o'er his earth, his present paths expand.
In sober majesty and matron grace
Sage science now conducts her filial race;

And if, while all their arts around them shine,
They culture more the solid than the fine,
Tis to correct their fatal faults (47) of old,
When, caught by tinsel, they forgot the gold,
When their strong brilliant imitative lines
Traced nature only in her gay designs,
Rear'd the proud column, toned her chanting lyre,
Warm'd the full senate with her words of fire,
Pour'd on the eanvas every pulse of life
And bade the marble rage with human strife,
  These were the arts that nursed unequal sway,
That priests would pamper and that kings would pay,
That spoke to vulgar sense and often stole
The sense of right and freedom from the soul.
While, circumscribed in some concentred clime,
They reacht but one small nation at a time,
Dazzled that nation, pufft her local pride,
Proclaim'd her hatred to the world beside,
Drew back returning hatred from afar
And sunk themselves beneath the storms of war.
  As, when the sun moves o'er the flaming zone,
Collecting clouds attend his fervid throne,

Superior splendors, in his morn display'd,
Prepare for noontide but a heavier shade;
Thus where the brilliant arts alone prevail'd,
Their shining course succeeding storms assail'd;
Pride, wrong and insult hemm'd their scanty reign,
A Nile their stream, a Hellespont their main,
Content with Tiber's narrow shores to wind,
They fledged their Eagle but to fang mankind;
Ere great inventions found a tardy birth,
And with their new creations blest the earth.
Now sober'd man a steadier gait assumes,
Broad is the beam that breaks the Gothic glooms.
At once consenting nations lift their eyes
And hail the holy dawn that streaks the skies;
Arabian califs rear the spires of Spain,
The Lombards keel their Adriatic main,
Great Charles, invading and reviving all,
Plants o'er with schools his numerous states of Gaul;
And Alfred opes the mines whence Albion draws
The ore of all her wealth,—her liberty and laws.
Ausonian cities interchange and spread
The lights of learning on the wings of trade;

Bologna's student walls arise to fame,
Germania, thine their rival honors claim;
Halle, Gottinge, Upsal, Kiel, and Leyden smile,
Oxonia, Cambridge cheer Britannia's isle;
Where, like her lark, gay Chaucer leads the lay,
The matin carol of his country's day.

Blind War himself, that erst opposed all good
And whelm'd meek Science in her votaries' blood,
Now smooths, by means unseen, her modest way,
Extends her limits and secures her sway.
From Europe's world his mad crusaders pour
Their banded myriads on the Asian shore;
The mystic Cross, thro famine, toil and blood,
Leads their long marches to the tomb of God.
Thro realms of industry their passage lies,
And labor'd affluence feasts their curious eyes;
Till fields of slaughter whelm the broken host,
Their pride appall'd, their warmest zealots lost,
The wise remains to their own shores return,
Transplant all arts that Hagar's race adorn,
Learn from long intercourse their mutual ties
And find in commerce where their interest lies.

From Drave's long course to Biscay's bending shores,
Where Adria sleeps, to where the Bothnian roars,
In one great Hanse, for earth's whole traffic known,
Free cities rise and in their golden zone
Bind all the interior states; nor princes dare
Infringe their franchise with voracious war.
All shield them safe and joy to share the gain
That spreads o'er land from each surrounding main,
Makes Indian stuffs, Arabian gums their own,
Plants Persian gems on every Celtic crown,
Pours thro their opening woodlands milder day
And gives to genius his expansive play.

This blessed moment, from the towers of Thorn
New splendor rises; there the sage is born!
The sage who starts these planetary spheres,
Deals out their task to wind their own bright years,
Restores his station to the parent sun,
And leads his duteous daughters round his throne.
Each mounts obedient on her wheels of fire,
Whirls round her sisters and salutes the sire,
Guides her new car, her youthful coursers tries,
Curves careful paths along her alter'd skies,

Learns all her mazes thro the host of even,
And hails and joins the harmony of heaven.
—Fear not, Copernicus! let loose the rein,
Launch from their goals and mark the moving train;
Fix at their sun thy calculating eye,
Compare and count their courses round their sky.
Fear no disaster from the slanting force
That warps them staggering in elliptic course;
Thy sons with steadier ken shall aid the search
And firm and fashion their majestic march,
Kepler prescribe the laws no stars can shun,
And Newton tie them to the eternal sun.
His optic tube thy Galileo plies
And sends new colonies to stock the skies,
Gives Jove his satellites and first adorns
Effulgent Phosphor with his silver horns.
Herschel ascends himself (48) with venturous wain
And joins and flanks thy planetary train,
Perceives his distance from their elder spheres
And guards with numerous moons the lonely round he steers.
Yes, bright Copernicus, thy beams far hurl'd
Shall startle well this intellectual world,

Break the delusive dreams of ancient lore,
New floods of light on every subject pour,
Thro Physic Nature many a winding trace
And seat the Moral on her sister's base.
Descartes with force gigantic toils alone,
Unshrines old errors and propounds his own;
Like a blind Samson, gropes their strong abodes,
Whelms deep in dust their temples and their gods,
Buries himself with those false codes they drew
And makes his followers frame and fix the true.
Bacon with every power of genius fraught,
Spreads over worlds his mantling wings of thought,
Draws in firm lines and tells in nervous tone
All that is yet and all that shall be known.
Withes Proteus Matter in his arms of might
And drags her tortuous secrets forth to light,
Bids men their unproved systems all forego,
Informs them what to learn and how to know,
Waves the first flambeau thro the night that veils
Egyptian fables and Phenician tales,
Strips from all plundering Greece the cloke she wore
And shows the blunders of her borrow'd lore.

One vast creation, lately borne abroad,
Cheers the young nations like a nurturing god,
Breathes thro them all the same wide searching soul,
Forms, feeds, refines and animates the whole,
Guards every ground they gain and forward brings
Glad science soaring on cerulean wings,
Instructs all men her golden gifts to prize
And catch new glories from her beamful eyes,—
Tis the prolific Press; whose tablet, fraught
By graphic Genius with his painted thought,
Flings forth by millions the prodigious birth
And in a moment stocks the astonisht earth.

Genius, enamor'd of his fruitful bride,
Assumes new force and elevates his pride.
No more, recumbent o'er his finger'd style,
He plods whole years each copy to compile,
Leaves to ludibrious winds the priceless page,
Or to chance fires the treasure of an age;
But bold and buoyant, with his sister Fame,
He strides o'er earth, holds high his ardent flame,
Calls up Discovery with her tube and scroll
And points the trembling magnet to the pole.

Hence the brave Lusitanians stretch the sail,
Scorn guiding stars and tame the midsea gale;
And hence thy prow deprest the boreal wain,
Rear'd adverse heavens, a second earth to gain,
Ran down old Night, her western curtain thirl'd
And snatcht from swaddling shades an infant world.
Rome, Athens, Memphis, Tyre! had you but known
This glorious triad, now familiar grown,
The Press, the Magnet faithful to its pole,
And earth's own movement round her stedfast goal;
Ne'er had your science from that splendid height,
Sunk in her strength nor seen succeeding night.
Her own utility had forced her sway,
All nations caught the fast extending ray,
Nature thro all her kingdoms oped the road,
Resign'd her secrets and her wealth bestow'd;
Her moral codes a like dominion rear'd,
Freedom been born and folly disappear'd,
War and his monsters sunk beneath her ban
And left the world to reason and to man.
But now behold him bend his broader way,
Lift keener eyes and drink diviner day,

All systems scrutinize, their truths unfold,
Prove well the recent, well revise the old,
Reject all mystery and define with force
The point he aims at in his laboring course,—
To know these elements, learn how they wind,
Their wondrous webs of matter and of mind,
What springs, what guides organic life requires,
To move, rule, rein its ever changing gyres,
Improve and utilize each opening birth
And aid the labors of this nurturing earth.
But chief their moral soul he learns to trace,
That stronger chain which links and leads the race;
Which forms and sanctions every social tie
And blinds or clears their intellectual eye.
He strips that soul from every filmy shade
That schools had caught, that oracles had made,
Relumes her visual nerve, develops strong
The rules of right, the subtle shifts of wrong;
Of civil power draws clear the sacred line,
Gives to just government its right divine,
Forms, varies, fashions, as his lights increase,
Till earth is fill'd with happiness and peace.

Already taught, thou knowst the fame that waits
His rising seat in thy confederate states:
There stands the model, thence he long shall draw
His forms of policy, his traits of law;
Each land shall imitate, each nation join
The well based brotherhood, the league divine,
Extend its empire with the circling sun,
And band the peopled globe within its federal zone.
As thus he spoke, returning tears of joy
Suffused the Hero's cheek and pearl'd his eye:
Unveil, said he, my friend, and stretch once more
Beneath my view that heaven-illumined shore;
Let me behold her silver beams expand
To lead all nations, lighten every land,
Instruct the total race and teach at last
Their toils to lessen and their chains to cast,
Trace and attain the purpose of their birth
And hold in peace this heritage of earth.
The Seraph smiled consent; the Hero's eye
Watcht for the daybeam round the changing sky.

ARGUMENT.

The vision resumed and extended over the whole earth. Present character of different nations. Future progress of society with respect to commerce; discoveries; inland navigation; philosophical, medical and political knowledge. Science of government. Assimilation and final union of all languages. Its effect on education and on the advancement of physical and moral science. The physical precedes the moral, as Phosphor precedes the Sun. View of a general Congress from all nations, assembled to establish the political harmony of mankind. Conclusion.

COLUMBIAD.

BOOK X.

Hesper again his heavenly power display'd
And shook the yielding canopy of shade.
Sudden the stars their trembling fires withdrew,
Returning splendors burst upon the view,
Floods of unfolding light the skies adorn
And more than midday glories grace the morn.
So shone the earth, as if the sideral train,
Broad as full suns, had sail'd the etherial plain;
When no distinguisht orb could strike the sight,
But one clear blaze of all surrounding light
O'erflow'd the vault of heaven. For now in view
Remoter climes and future ages drew;

Whose deeds of happier fame, in long array,
Call'd into vision. fill the newborn day.
  Far as seraphic power could lift the eye,
Or earth or ocean bend the yielding sky,
Or circling suns awake the breathing gale,
Drake lead the way, or Cook extend the sail;
Where Behren sever'd, with adventurous prow,
Hesperia's headland from Tartaria's brow;
Where sage Vancouvre's patient leads were hurl'd,
Where Deimen stretcht his solitary world;
All lands, all seas that boast a present name
And all that unborn time shall give to fame
Around the Pair in bright expansion rise,
And earth in one vast level bounds the skies.
  They saw the nations tread their different shores,
Ply their own toils and wield their local powers,
Their present state in all its views disclose,
Their gleams of happiness, their shades of woes,
Plodding in various stages thro the range
Of man's unheeded but unceasing change.
Columbus traced them with experienced eye
And class'd and counted all the flags that fly;

He markt what tribes still rove the savage waste,
What cultured realms the sweets of plenty taste;
Where arts and virtues fix their golden reign,
Or peace adorns or slaughter dies the plain.
He saw the restless Tartar proud to roam,
Move with his herds and pitch a transient home;
Tibet's long tracts and China's fixt domain,
Dull as their despots, yield their cultured grain;
Cambodia, Siam, Asia's myriad isles
And old Indostan, with their wealthy spoils
Attract adventurous masters and o'ershade
Their sunbright ocean with the wings of trade.
Arabian robbers, Syrian Kurds combined,
Create their deserts and infest mankind;
The Turk's dim crescent, like a day-struck star,
As Russia's eagle shades their haunts of war,
Shrinks from insulted Europe, who divide
The shatter'd empire to the Pontic tide.
He traced impervious Afric, where alone
She lies encircled with the verdant zone
That lines her endless coast and still sustains
Her northern pirates and her eastern swains,

Mourns her interior tribes purloin'd away
And chain'd and sold beyond Atlantic day.
Brazilla's wilds, Mackensie's savage lands
With bickering strife inflame their furious bands;
Atlantic isles and Europe's cultured shores
Heap their vast wealth, exchange their growing stores,
All arts inculcate, new discoveries plan,
Teaze and torment but school the race of man.
While his own federal states, extending far,
Calm their brave sons now breathing from the war,
Unfold their harbors, spread their genial soil
And welcome freemen to the cheerful toil.
A sight so solemn, as it varied round,
Fill'd his fond heart with reveries profound;
He felt the infinitude of thoughts that pass
And guide and govern that enormous mass.
The cares that agitate, the creeds that blind,
The woes that waste the many-master'd kind,
The distance great that still remains to trace,
Ere sober sense can harmonize the race,
Held him suspense, imprest with reverence meek,
And choked his utterance as he wish'd to speak:

When Hesper thus: The paths they here pursue,
Wide as they seem unfolding to thy view,
Show but a point in that long circling course
Which cures their weakness and confirms their force,
Lends that experience which alone can close
The scenes of strife and give the world repose.
Yet here thou seest the same progressive plan
That draws for mutual succor man to man,
From twain to tribe, from tribe to realm dilates,
In federal union groups a hundred states,
Thro all their turns with gradual scale ascends,
Their powers, their passions and their interest blends;
While growing arts their social virtues spread,
Enlarge their compacts and unlock their trade;
Till each remotest clan, by commerce join'd,
Links in the chain that binds all humankind,
Their bloody banners sink in darkness furl'd
And one white flag of peace triumphant walks the world.
As infant streams, from oozing earth at first
With feeble force and lonely murmurs burst,
From myriad unseen fountains draw the rills
And curl contentious round their hundred hills,

Meet, froth and foam, their dashing currents swell,
O'er crags and rocks their furious course impel,
Impetuous plunging plow the mounds of earth
And tear the fostering flanks that gave them birth;
Mad with the strength they gain, they thicken deep
Their muddy waves and slow and sullen creep,
O'erspread whole regions in their lawless pride,
Then stagnate long, then shrink and curb their tide;
Anon more tranquil grown, with steadier sway,
Thro broader banks they shape their seaward way,
From different climes converging, join and spread
Their mingled waters in one widening bed,
Profound, transparent; till the liquid zone
Bands half the globe and drinks the golden sun,
Sweeps onward still the still expanding plain
And moves majestic to the boundless main.
Tis thus Society's small sources rise;
Thro passions wild her infant progress lies;
Fear, with its host of follies, errors, woes,
Creates her obstacles and forms her foes;
Misguided interest, local pride withstand,
Till long tried ills her growing views expand,

Till tribes and states and empires find their place,
Whose mutual wants her widest walks embrace;
Enlighten'd interest, moral sense at length,
Combine their aids to elevate her strength,
Lead o'er the world her peace-commanding sway
And light her steps with everlasting day.

From that markt stage of man we now behold
More rapid strides his coming paths unfold;
His continents are traced, his islands found,
His well taught sails on all his billows bound,
His varying wants their new discoveries ply
And seek in earth's whole range their sure supply.

First of his future stages, thou shalt see
His trade unfetter'd and his ocean free.
From thy young states the code consoling springs
To strip from vulture War his naval wings;
In views so just all Europe's powers combine,
And earth's full voice approves the vast design.
Tho still her inland realms the combat wage
And hold in lingering broils the unsettled age,
Yet no rude shocks that shake the crimson plain
Shall more disturb the labors of the main;

The main that spread so wide his travell'd way,
Liberal as air, impartial as the day,
That all thy race the common wealth might share,
Exchange their fruits and fill their treasures there,
Their speech assimilate, their counsels blend,
Till mutual interest fix the mutual friend.
Now see, my son, the destined hour advance;
Safe in their leagues commercial navies dance,
Leave their curst cannon on the quay-built strand
And like the stars of heaven a fearless course command.
The Hero lookt; beneath his wondering eyes
Gay streamers lengthen round the seas and skies;
The countless nations open all their stores,
Load every wave and crowd the lively shores;
Bright sails in mingling mazes streak the air,
And commerce triumphs o'er the rage of war.
From Baltic streams, from Elba's opening side,
From Rhine's long course and Texel's laboring tide,
From Gaul, from Albion, tired of fruitless fight,
From green Hibernia, clothed in recent light,
Hispania's strand that two broad oceans lave,
From Senegal and Gambia's golden wave,

Tago the rich and Douro's viny shores,
The sweet Canaries and the soft Azores,
Commingling barks their mutual banners hail
And drink by turns the same distending gale.
Thro Calpe's strait that leads the Midland main,
From Adria, Pontus, Nile's resurgent reign,
The sails look forth and wave their bandrols high
And ask their breezes from a broader sky.
Where Asia's isles and utmost shorelands bend,
Like rising suns the sheeted masts ascend;
Coast after coast their flowing flags unrol,
From Deimen's rocks to Zembla's ice-propt pole,
Where Behren's pass collapsing worlds divides,
Where California breaks the billowy tides,
Peruvian streams their golden margins boast,
Or Chili bluffs or Plata flats the coast.
Where, clothed in splendor, his Atlantic way
Spreads the blue borders of Hesperian day,
From all his havens, with majestic sweep,
The swiftest boldest daughters of the deep
Swarm forth before him; till the cloudlike train
From pole to pole o'ersheet the whitening main.

So some primeval seraph, placed on high,
From heaven's sublimest point o'erlookt the sky,
When space unfolding heard the voice of God,
And suns and stars and systems roll'd abroad,
Caught their first splendors from his beamful eye,
Began their years and vaulted round their sky;
Their social spheres in bright confusion play,
Exchange their beams and fill the newborn day.
Nor seas alone the countless barks behold;
Earth's inland realms their naval paths unfold.
Her plains, long portless, now no more complain
Of useless rills and fountains nursed in vain;
Canals curve thro them many a liquid line,
Prune their wild streams, their lakes and oceans join.
Where Darien hills o'erlook the gulfy tide,
Cleft in his view the enormous banks divide;
Ascending sails their opening pass pursue
And waft the sparkling treasures of Peru.
Moxoe resigns his stagnant world of fen,
Allures, rewards the cheerful toils of men,
Leads their long new made rivers round his reign,
Drives off the stench and waves his golden grain,

Feeds a whole nation from his cultured shore,
Where not a bird could skim the skies before.
From Mohawk's mouth, far westing with the sun,
Long bright canals thro all the midlands run,
Tap the redundant lakes, the broad hills brave,
And Hudson marry with Missouri's wave.
From dim Superior, whose uncounted sails
Shade his full seas and bosom all his gales,
New paths unfolding seek Mackensie's tide,
And towns and empires rise along their side;
Slave's crystal highways all his north adorn,
Like coruscations from the boreal morn.
Proud Missisippi, tamed and taught his road,
Flings forth irriguous from his generous flood
Ten thousand watery glades; that, round him curl'd,
Vein the broad bosom of the western world.
From the red banks of Arab's odorous tide
Their Isthmus opens and strange waters glide;
Europe from all her shores with crowded sails,
Looks thro the pass and calls the Asian gales.
Volga and Obi distant oceans join,
Delighted Danube weds the wasting Rhine;

Elbe, Oder, Neister channel many a plain
Exchange their barks and try each other's main.
All infant streams and every mountain rill
Choose their new paths, some useful task to fill,
Each acre irrigate, re-road the earth
And serve at last the purpose of their birth.
  Earth, garden'd all, a tenfold burden brings;
Her fruits, her odors, her salubrious springs
Swell, breathe and bubble from the soil they grace,
String with strong nerves the renovating race,
Their numbers multiply in every land,
Their toils diminish and their powers expand;
And while she rears them with a statelier frame
Their soul she kindles with diviner flame,
Leads their bright intellect with fervid glow
Thro all the mass of things that still remain to know.
  He saw the aspiring genius of the age
Soar in the Bard and strengthen in the Sage:
The Bard with bolder hand assumes the lyre,
Warms the glad nations with unwonted fire,
Attunes to virtue all the tones that roll
Their tides of transport thro the expanding soul.

For him no more, beneath their furious gods,
Old ocean crimsons and Olympus nods,
Uprooted mountains sweep the dark profound
Or Titans groan beneath the rending ground.
No more his clangor maddens up the mind,
To crush, to conquer and enslave mankind,
To build on ruin'd realms the shrine of fame,
And load his numbers (49) with a tyrant's name.
Far nobler objects animate his tongue
And give new energies to epic song;
To moral charms he bids the world attend,
Fraternal states their mutual ties extend,
O'er cultured earth the rage of conquest cease,
War sink in night and nature smile in peace.
Soaring with science then he learns to string
Her highest harp and brace her broadest wing,
With her own force to fray the paths untrod,
With her own glance to ken the total God,
Thro heavens o'ercanopied by heavens behold
New suns ascend and other skies unfold,
Social and system'd worlds around him shine,
And lift his living strains to harmony divine.

The Sage with steadier lights directs his ken,
Thro twofold nature leads the walks of men,
Remolds her moral and material frames,
Their mutual aids, their sister laws proclaims.
Disease before him with its causes flies
And boasts no more of sickly soils and skies;
His well proved codes the healing science aid,
Its base establish and its blessing spread,
With long wrought life to teach the race to glow,
And vigorous nerves to grace the locks of snow.
From every shape that varying matter gives,
That rests or ripens, vegetates or lives,
His chymic powers new combinations plan,
Yield new creations, finer forms to man,
High springs of health for mind and body trace,
Add force and beauty to the joyous race,
Arm with new engines his adventurous hand,
Stretch o'er these elements his wide command,
Lay the proud storm submissive at his feet,
Change, temper, tame all subterranean heat,
Probe laboring earth, and drag from her dark side
The young Volcano, ere his voice be tried;

Walk under ocean, ride the buoyant air,
Brew the soft shower, the labor'd land repair,
A fruitful soil o'er sandy deserts spread
And clothe with culture every mountain's head.
Where system'd realms their mutual glories lend,
And well taught sires the cares of state attend,
Thro every maze of man they learn to wind,
Note each device that prompts the Proteus mind,
What soft restraints the temper'd breast requires
To taste new joys and cherish new desires,
Expand the selfish to the social flame,
And rear the soul to deeds of nobler fame.
They mark, in all the past records of praise,
What partial views heroic zeal could raise;
What mighty states on others' ruins stood
And built unsafe their haughty seats in blood;
How public virtue's ever borrow'd name
With proud applauses graced the deeds of shame,
Bade each imperial standard wave sublime,
And wild ambition havoc every clime;
From chief to chief the kindling spirit ran,
Heirs of false fame and enemies of man.

Where Grecian states in even balance hung
And warm'd with jealous fires the patriot's tongue,
The exclusive ardor cherisht in the breast
Love to one land and hatred to the rest.
And where the flames of civil discord rage,
And Roman arms with Roman arms engage,
The mime of virtue rises still the same
To build a Cesar's as a Pompey's name.
But now no more the patriotic mind,
To narrow views and local laws confined,
Gainst neighboring lands directs the public rage,
Plods for a clan or counsels for an age;
But soars to loftier thoughts and reaches far
Beyond the power, beyond the wish of war;
For realms and ages forms the general aim,
Makes patriot views and moral views the same,
Works with enlighten'd zeal, to see combined
The strength and happiness of humankind.
Long had Columbus with delighted eyes
Markt all the changes that around him rise,
Lived thro descending ages as they roll
And feasted still the still expanding soul;

When now the peopled regions swell more near,
And a mixt noise tumultuous stuns his ear.
At first, like heavy thunders roll'd in air,
Or the rude shock of cannonading war,
Or waves resounding on the craggy shore,
Hoarse roll'd the loud-toned undulating roar.
But soon the sounds like human voices rise,
All nations pouring undistinguisht cries;
Till more distinct the wide concussion grown
Rolls forth at times an accent like his own.
By turns the tongues assimilating blend,
And smoother idioms over earth ascend;
Mingling and softening still in every gale,
O'er discord's din, harmonious tones prevail.
At last a simple universal sound
Winds thro the welkin, soothes the world around,
From echoing shores in swelling strain replies
And moves melodious o'er the warbling skies.
Such wild commotions as he heard and view'd,
In fixt astonishment the Hero stood
And thus besought the Guide: Celestial friend,
What good to man can these dread scenes intend?

Some sore distress attends that boding sound
That breathed its hoarse tonations o'er the ground.
War sure hath ceased; or have my erring eyes
Misread the glorious visions of the skies?
Tell then, my Seer, if future earthquakes sleep,
Closed in the conscious caverns of the deep,
Waiting the day of vengeance, when to roll
And rock the rending pillars of the pole.
Or tell if aught more dreadful to my race
In these dark signs thy heavenly wisdom trace;
And why the loud discordance melts again
In the smooth glidings of a tuneful strain.

The guardian god replied: Thy fears give o'er;
War's hosted hounds shall havoc earth no more;
No sore distress these signal sounds foredoom,
But give the pledge of peaceful years to come;
The tongues of nations here their accents blend,
Till one pure language thro the world extend.

Thou knowst the tale of Babel; how the skies
Fear'd for their safety as they felt him rise,
Sent unknown jargons mid the laboring bands,
Confused their converse and unnerved their hands,

Dispersed the bickering tribes and drove them far
From peaceful toil to violence and war;
Bade kings arise with bloody flags unfurl'd,
Bade pride and conquest wander o'er the world,
Taught adverse creeds, commutual hatreds bred,
Till holy homicide the climes o'erspread.
—For that fine apologue, with mystic strain,
Gave like the rest a golden age (50) to man,
Ascribed perfection to his infant state,
Science unsought and all his arts innate;
Supposed the experience of the growing race
Must lead him retrograde and cramp his pace,
Obscure his vision as his lights increast
And sink him from an angel to a beast.

Tis thus the teachers of despotic sway
Strive in all times to blot his inward day,
To keep him curb'd nor let him lift his eyes
To see where happiness, where misery lies.
They lead him blind, and o'er each newborn light
Cast their own shadows, renovate the night,
Crush every art that might the mind expand
And plant with demons every desert land;

That, fixt in straiten'd bounds, their lust of power
May ravage still and still the race devour.
An easy prey the hoodwinkt hordes remain,
And oceans roll and shores extend in vain.
Long have they reign'd; till now the race at last
Shake off their manacles, their blinders cast,
O'errule the crimes their fraudful foes produce,
By ways unseen to serve the happiest use,
Tempt the wide wave, probe every yielding soil,
Fill with their fruits the hardy hand of toil,
Unite their forces, wheel the conquering car,
Deal mutual death, but civilize by war.
Dear bought the experiment and hard the strife
Of social man, that rear'd his arts to life.
His passions wild that agitate the mind,
His reason calm, their watchful guide design'd,
While yet unreconciled, his march restrain,
Mislead the judgment and betray the man.
Fear, his first passion, long maintain'd the sway,
Long shrouded in its glooms the mental ray,
Shook, curb'd, controll'd his intellectual force
And bore him wild thro many a devious course.

Long had his Reason, with experienced eye,
Perused the book of earth and scaled the sky,
Led fancy, memory, foresight in her train,
And o'er creation stretcht her vast domain;
Yet would that rival Fear her strength appal;
In that one conflict always sure to fall,
Mild Reason shunn'd the foe she could not brave,
Renounced her empire and remained a slave.
But deathless, tho debased, she still could find
Some beams of truth to pour upon the mind;
And tho she dared no moral code to scan,
Thro physic forms she learnt to lead the man;
To strengthen thus his opening orbs of sight
And nerve and clear them for a stronger light,
That stronger light, from nature's double codes,
Now springs expanding and his doubts explodes;
All nations catch it, all their tongues combine
To hail the human morn and greet the day divine.
At this blest period, when the total race
Shall speak one language and all truths embrace,
Instruction clear a speedier course shall find,
And open earlier on the infant mind.

No foreign terms shall crowd with barbarous rules
The dull unmeaning pageantry of schools;
Nor dark authorities nor names unknown
Fill the learn'd head with ignorance not its own;
But wisdom's eye with beams unclouded shine,
And simplest rules her native charms define;
One living language, one unborrow'd dress
Her boldest flights with fullest force express;
Triumphant virtue, in the garb of truth,
Win a pure passage to the heart of youth,
Pervade all climes where suns or oceans roll
And warm the world with one great moral soul,
To see, facilitate, attain the scope
Of all their labor and of all their hope.

As early Phosphor on his silver throne,
Fair type of truth and promise of the sun,
Smiles up the orient in his dew-dipt ray,
Illumes the front of heaven and leads the day;
Thus Physic Science with exploring eyes
First o'er the nations bids her beauties rise,
Prepares the glorious way to pour abroad
Her sister's brighter beams, the purest light of God.

Then Moral Science leads the lively mind
Thro broader fields and pleasures more refined;
Teaches the temper'd soul, at one vast view,
To glance o'er time and look existence thro,
See worlds and worlds, to being's formless end,
With all their hosts on her prime power depend,
Seraphs and suns and systems, as they rise,
Live in her life and kindle from her eyes,
Her cloudless ken, her all pervading soul
Illume, sublime and harmonize the whole;
Teaches the pride of man its breadth to bound
In one small point of this amazing round,
To shrink and rest where nature fixt its fate,
A line its space, a moment for its date;
Instructs the heart an ampler joy to taste,
And share its feelings with each human breast,
Expand its wish to grasp the total kind
Of sentient soul, of cogitative mind;
Till mutual love commands all strife to cease,
And earth join joyous in the songs of peace.
  Thus heard Columbus, eager to behold
The famed Apocalypse its years unfold;

The soul stood speaking thro his gazing eyes,
And thus his voice : Oh let the visions rise!
Command, celestial guide, from each far pole,
John's vision'd morn to open on my soul,
And raise the scenes, by his reflected light,
Living and glorious to my longing sight.
Let heaven unfolding show the eternal throne,
And all the concave flame in one clear sun;
On clouds of fire, with angels at his side,
The Prince of Peace, the King of Salem ride,
With smiles of love to greet the bridal earth,
Call slumbering ages to a second birth,
With all his white-robed millions fill the train,
And here commence the interminable reign!
  Such views, the Saint replies, for sense too bright,
Would seal thy vision in eternal night;
Man cannot face nor seraph power display
The mystic beams of such an awful day.
Enough for thee, that thy delighted mind
Should trace the temporal actions of thy kind;
That time's descending veil should ope so far
Beyond the reach of wretchedness and war,

Till all the paths in nature's sapient plan
Fair in thy presence lead the steps of man,
And form at last, on earth's extended ball,
Union of parts and happiness of all.
To thy glad ken these rolling years have shown
The boundless blessings thy vast labors crown,
That with the joys of unborn ages blest,
Thy soul exulting may retire to rest.
But see once more! beneath a change of skies,
The last glad visions wait thy raptured eyes.
  Eager he lookt. Another train of years
Had roll'd unseen and brighten'd still their spheres;
Earth more resplendent in the floods of day
Assumed new smiles and flusht around him lay.
Green swell the mountains, calm the oceans roll,
Fresh beams of beauty kindle round the pole;
Thro all the range where shores and seas extend,
In tenfold pomp the works of peace ascend.
Robed in the bloom of spring's eternal year,
And ripe with fruits the same glad fields appear;
O'er hills and vales perennial gardens run,
Cities unwall'd stand sparkling to the sun;

The streams all freighted from the bounteous plain
Swell with the load and labor to the main,
Whose stormless waves command a steadier gale
And prop the pinions of a bolder sail:
Sway'd with the floating weight each ocean toils,
And joyous nature's full perfection smiles.
  Fill'd with unfolding fate, the vision'd age
Now leads its actors on a broader stage;
When clothed majestic in the robes of state,
Moved by one voice, in general congress meet
The legates of all empires. Twas the place
Where man first sought to socialize his race;
Ere yet beguiled, the dark delirious hordes
Began to fight for altars and for lords;
Nile washes still the soil and feels once more
The works of wisdom press his peopled shore.
  In this mid site, this monumental clime,
Rear'd by all realms to brave the wrecks of time
A spacious dome swells up, commodious great,
The last resort, the unchanging scene of state.
On rocks of adamant the walls ascend,
Tall columns heave and sky-like arches bend;

Bright o'er the golden roofs the glittering spires
Far in the concave meet the solar fires;
Four blazing fronts, with gates unfolding high,
Look with immortal splendor round the sky.
Hither the delegated sires ascend,
And all the cares of every clime attend.
As the blest guardian guides, to whom was given
To light the suns and steer the stars of heaven,
(When one great cosmogyre has proved their spheres,
And time well taught them how to wind their years)
Shall meet in general council; call'd to state
The laws and labors that their charge await;
To learn, to teach, to settle how to hold
Their course more glorious, as their lights unfold:
From all the bounds of space (the mandate known)
They wing their passage to the eternal throne;
Each thro his far dim sky illumes the road
And sails and centres tow'rd the mount of God;
There, in mid universe, their seats to rear,
Exchange their counsels and their works compare:
So, from all tracts of earth, this gathering throng
In ships and chariots shape their course along,

Reach with unwonted speed the place assign'd
To hear and give the counsels of mankind.
South of the sacred mansion, first resort
The assembled sires, and pass the spacious court.
Here in his porch earth's figured Genius stands,
Truth's mighty mirror poising in his hands;
Graved on the pedestal and chased in gold,
Man's noblest arts their symbol forms unfold,
His tillage and his trade; with all the store
Of wondrous fabrics and of useful lore:
Labors that fashion to his sovereign sway
Earth's total powers, her soil and air and sea;
Force them to yield their fruits at his known call,
And bear his mandates round the rolling ball.
Beneath the footstool all destructive things,
The mask of priesthood and the mace of kings,
Lie trampled in the dust; for here at last
Fraud, folly, error all their emblems cast.
Each envoy here unloads his wearied hand
Of some old idol from his native land;
One flings a pagod on the mingled heap,
One lays a crescent, one a cross to sleep;

Swords, sceptres, mitres, crowns and globes and stars.
Codes of false fame and stimulants to wars
Sink in the settling mass; since guile began,
These are the agents of the woes of man.
  Now the full concourse, where the arches bend,
Pour thro by thousands and their seats ascend.
Far as the centred eye can range around,
Or the deep trumpet's solemn voice resound,
Long rows of reverend sires sublime extend,
And cares of worlds on every brow suspend.
High in the front, for soundest wisdom known,
A sire elect in peerless grandeur shone;
He open'd calm the universal cause
To give each realm its limit and its laws,
Bid the last breath of tired contention cease
And bind all regions in the leagues of peace;
Till one confederate, condependent sway
Spread with the sun and bound the walks of day,
One centred system, one all ruling soul
Live thro the parts and regulate the whole.
  Here then, said Hesper, with a blissful smile,
Behold the fruits of thy long years of toil.

To yon bright borders of Atlantic day
Thy swelling pinions led the trackless way
And taught mankind such useful deeds to dare,
To trace new seas and happy nations rear;
Till by fraternal hands their sails unfurl'd
Have waved at last in union o'er the world.

Then let thy stedfast soul no more complain
Of dangers braved and griefs endured in vain,
Of courts insidious, envy's poison'd stings,
The loss of empire and the frown of kings;
While these broad views thy better thoughts compose
To spurn the malice of insulting foes;
And all the joys descending ages gain
Repay thy labors and remove thy pain.

NOTES.

Tho it would be more convenient to the reader to find some of these notes, especially the shorter ones, at the bottom of the pages to which they refer, yet most of them are of such a length as would render that mode of placing them disadvantageous to the symmetry of the pages and the general appearance of the work. It seemed necessary that these should be collected at the end of the volume; and it was thought proper that the others should not be separated from them.

The notes will probably be found too voluminous for the taste of some readers; but others would doubtless be better pleased to see them still augmented, as several of the philosophical subjects and historical allusions are left unexplained. Were I to offer apologies in this case, I should hardly know on which side to begin. I will therefore only say that in this appendage, as in the body of the work, I have aimed, as well as I was able, at blending in due proportions the useful with the agreeable.

COLUMBIAD.

NOTES.

No. 1.

One gentle guardian once could shield the brave;
But now that guardian slumbers in the grave.

Book I. Line 105.

THE death of queen Isabella, which happened before the last return of Columbus from America, was a subject of great sorrow to him. In her he lost his only powerful friend in Spain, on whose influence he was accustomed to rely in counteracting the perpetual intrigues of a host of enemies, whose rank and fortune gave them a high standing at the court of Valladolid. Their situation and connexions must have commanded a weight of authority not easily resisted by an individual foreigner, however illustrious from his merit.

It was a grievous reflection for Columbus that his services, tho great in themselves and unequalled in their consequences to the world, had been performed in an age and for a nation which knew not their value, as well as for an ungrateful monarch who chose to disregard them.

No. 2.

As awed to silence savage bands gave place
And hail'd with joy the sun-descended race.

Book I. Line 243.

The original habitants of Hispaniola were worshippers of the sun. The Europeans, when they first landed there, were supposed by them to be gods, and consequently descended from the sun. See the subject of solar worship treated more at large in a subsequent note.

No. 3.

High lantern'd in his heaven the cloudless White
Gives the glad sailor an eternal light;

Book I. Line 330.

The White Mountain of Newhampshire, tho eighty miles from the sea, is the first land to be discovered in approaching that part of the coast of North America. It serves as a landmark for a considerable length of coast, of difficult navigation.

No. 4.

Whirl'd from the monstrous Andes' bursting sides
Maragnon leads his congregating tides;

Book I. Line 362.

This river, from different circumstances, has obtained several different names. It has been called Amazon, from an idea that some part of the neighboring country was inhabited by a race of warlike women, resembling what Herodotus relates of the Amazons of Scythia. It has been called Orellana, from its having been discovered by a Spanish officer of that name, who, on a certain expedition, deserted from the younger Pizarro on one of the sources of this river and navigated it from thence to the ocean. Maragnon is the original name given it by the natives, which name I choose to follow.

If we estimate its magnitude by the length of its course and the quantity of water it throws into the sea, it is much the greatest river that has hitherto come to our knowledge. Its navigation is said by Condamine and others to be uninterrupted for four thousand miles from the sea. Its breadth within the banks is sixty geographical miles; it receives in its course a variety of great rivers, besides those described in the text. Many of these descend from elevated countries and mountains covered with snow, the melting of which annually swells the Maragnon above its banks; when it overflows and fertilizes a vast extent of territory.

No. 5.

He saw Xaraya's diamond banks unfold
And Paraguay's deep channel paved with gold,

Book I. Line 452.

Some of the richest diamond mines are found on the banks of the lake Xaraya. The river Paraguay is remarkable for the quantities of gold dust found in its channel. The Rio de la Plata, properly so called, has its source in the mountains of Potosi; and it was probably from this circumstance that it received its name, which signifies River of Silver. This river, after having joined the Paraguay, which is larger than itself, retains its own name till it reaches the sea. Near the mouth, it is one hundred and fifty miles wide; but in other respects it is far inferior to the Maragnon.

No. 6.

Soon as the distant swell was seen to roll,
His ancient wishes reabsorb'd his soul;

Book I. Line 446.

The great object of Columbus, in most of his voyages, was to discover a western passage to India. He navigated the Gulf of Mexico with particular attention to this object, and was much disappointed in not finding a pass into the South Sea. The view he is here supposed to have of that ocean would therefore naturally recal his former desire of sailing to India.

No. 7.

This idle frith must open soon to fame,
Here a lost Lusitanian fix his name,

Book I. Line 488.

The Straits of Magellan, so called from having been discovered by a Portuguese navigator of that name, who first attempted to sail round the world and lost his life in the attempt.

No. 8.

Say, Palfrey, brave good man, was this thy doom?
Dwells here the secret of thy midsea tomb?

Book I. Line 623.

Colonel Palfrey of Boston was an officer of distinction in the American army during the war of independence. Soon after the war he proposed to visit Europe and embarked for England; but never more was heard of. The ship probably perished in the ice. His daughter, here alluded to, is now the wife of William Lee, American consul at Bordeaux.

No. 9.

The beasts all whitening roam the lifeless plain,
And caves unfrequent scoop the couch for man.

Book I. Line 749.

The color of animals is acquired partly from the food they eat thro successive generations and partly from the objects with which they are usually surrounded. Dr. Darwin has a curious note on this subject, in which he remarks on the advantages that insects and other small animals derive from their color, as a means of rendering them invisible to their more powerful enemies, who thus find it difficult to distinguish them from other objects where they reside. Some animals which inhabit cold countries turn white in winter when the earth is covered with snow, such as the snowbird of the Alps. Others in snowy regions are habitually white, such as the white bear of Russia.

No. 10.

A different cast the glowing zone demands
In Paria's blooms, from Tombut's burning sands.

Book II. Line 94.

Paria is a fertile country near the river Orinoco; the only part of the continent of America that Columbus had seen. Tombut in the same latitude is the most steril part of Africa. America embraces a greater compass of latitude by many degrees than the other continent; and yet its inhabitants present a much less variety in their physical and moral character. When shall we be able to account for this fact?

No. 11.

Yet when the hordes to happy nations rise
And earth by culture warms the genial skies,

Book II. Line 115.

Without entering into any discussion on the theory of heat and cold (a point not yet settled in our academies) I would just observe, in vindication of the expression in the text, that some solid matter, such for instance as the surface of the earth, seems absolutely necessary to the production of heat. At least it must be a matter more compact than that of the sun's rays; and perhaps its power of producing heat is in proportion to its solidity.

The warmth communicated to the atmosphere is doubtless produced by the combined causes of the earth and the sun; but the agency of the former is probably more powerful in this operation than that of the latter, and its presence more indispensable. For masses of matter will produce heat by friction, without the aid of the sun; but no experiment has yet proved that the rays of the sun are capable of producing heat without the aid of other and more solid matter. The air is temperate in those cavities of the earth where the sun is the most effectually excluded; whereas the coldest regions yet known to us are the tops of the Andes, where the sun's rays have the most direct operation, being the most vertical and the least obstructed by vapors. Those regions are deprived of heat by being so far removed from the broad surface of the earth; a body that appears requisite to warm the surrounding atmosphere by its cooperation with the action of the sun.

From these principles we may conclude that cultivation, in a woody country, tends to warm the atmosphere and meliorate a cold climate; as by removing the forests and marshes it opens the earth to the sun and allows them to act in conjunction upon the air.

According to the descriptions given of the middle parts of Europe by Cesar and Tacitus, it appears that those countries were much colder in their days than they are at present; cultivation seems to have softened that climate to a great degree. The same effect begins to be perceived in North America. Possibly it may in time become as apparent as the present difference in the temperature of the two continents.

No. 12.

A ruddier hue and deeper shade shall gain
And stalk in statelier figures on the plain.

Book II. Line 123.

The complexion of the inhabitants of North America, who are descended from the English and Dutch, is evidently darker and their stature taller than those of the English and Dutch in Europe.

No. 13.

Like Memphian hieroglyphs, to stretch the span
Of memory frail in momentary man.

Book II. Line 281.

We may reckon three stages of improvement in the graphic art or the art of communicating our thoughts to absent persons and to posterity by visible signs. First, the invention of painting ideas or representing actions, dates and other circumstances of historical fact, by the images of material things, drawn usually on a flat surface or sometimes carved or molded in a more solid form. This was the state at which the art had arrived in Egypt before the introduction of letters, and in Mexico before the arrival of the Spaniards. The Greeks in Egypt called it hieroglyphic.

Second, The invention of painting sounds, which we do by the use of letters or the alphabet, and which we call writing. This was a vast improvement; as it simplified in a wonderful degree the communication of thought. For ideas are infinite in number and variety; while the simple sounds we use to convey them to the ear are few, distinct and easy to be understood. It would indeed be impossible to express all our ideas by distinct and visible images. And even if the writer were able to do this, not many readers could be made to understand him; since it would be necessary that every new idea should have a new image invented and agreed upon between the writer and the reader, before it could be used: which preliminary could not be settled without the writer should see and converse with the reader. And he might as well in this case convey his ideas by oral speech; so that his writing could be of little use beyond a certain routine of established signs.

The number of simple sounds in human language used in discourse is not above eighteen or twenty; and these are so varied in the succession in which they are uttered, as to express an inconceivable and endless variety of thought and sentiment. Then, by the help of an alphabet of about twenty-six letters or visible signs, these sounds are translated from the ear to the eye; and we are able, by thus painting the sound, to arrest its fleeting nature, render it permanent and talk with distant nations and future ages, without any previous convention whatever, even supposing them to be ignorant of the language in which we write. This is the present state of the art, as commonly practised in all the countries where an alphabet is used. It is called the art of writing, and to understand it is called reading.

Third, Another invention, which is still in its infancy, is the art of painting phrases, or sentences, commonly called short-hand writing. This is yet but little used and only by a few dexterous persons who make it a particular study. Probably the true principles on which it ought to be founded are yet to be discovered. But it may be presumed, that in this part of the graphic art there remains to the ingenuity of future generations a course of improvements totally inconceivable to the present; by which the whole train of impressions now made upon the mind by reading a long and well written treatise may be conveyed by a few strokes of the pen and be received at a glance of the eye. This desideratum would be an abridgment of labor in our mental acquisitions, of which we cannot determine the consequences. It might make, in the progress of human knowledge, an epoch as remarkable as that which was made by the invention of alphabetical writing, and produce as great a change in the mode of transmitting the history of events.

One consequence of the invention of alphabetical writing seems to have been to throw into oblivion all previous historical facts; and it has thus left an immense void, which the imagination knows not how to fill, in contemplating the progress of our race. How many important discoveries, which still remain to our use, must have taken their origin in that space of time which is thus left a void to us! A vast succession of ages and ages of improvement must have preceded (for example) the invention of the wheel. The wheel must have been in common use, we know not how long, before alphabetical writing; because we find its image employed in painting ideas, during the first stage of the graphic art above described. The wheel was likewise in use before the mysteries of Ceres or those of Isis were established, as is evident from its being imagined as an instrument of punishment in hell, in the case of Ixion, as represented in those mysteries. The taming of the ox and horse, the use of the sickle and the bow and arrow, a considerable knowledge of astronomy and its application to the purposes of agriculture and navigation, with many other circumstances which show a prodigious improvement, must evidently have preceded the date of the zodiac; a date fixed by Dupuis, with a great degree of probability, at about seventeen thousand years from our time. This epoch would doubtless carry us back many thousand years beyond that of the alphabet; the invention of which was sufficient of itself to obliterate the details of previous history, as the event has proved.

How far the loss of these historical details is to be regretted, as an impediment to our progress in useful knowledge, I will not decide; but in one view, which I am going to state, it may be justly considered as a misfortune.

The art of painting ideas, being arrested in the state in which the use of the alphabet found it, went into general disuse for common purposes; and the works then extant, as well as the knowledge of writing in that mode, being no longer intelligible to the people, became objects of deep and laborious study and known only to the learned; that is, the men of leisure and contemplation. These men consequently ran it into mystery; making it a holy object, above the reach of vulgar inquiry. On this ground they established, in the course of ages, a profitable function or profession, in the practice of which a certain portion of men of the brightest talents could make a reputable living; taking care not to initiate more than a limited number of professors, no more than the people could maintain as priests. This mode of writing then assumed the name of hieroglyphic, or sacred painting, to distinguish it from that which had now become the vulgar mode of writing, by the use of the alphabet. This is perhaps the source of that ancient, vast and variegated system of false religion, with all its host of errors and miseries, which has so long and so grievously weighed upon the character of human nature.

In noticing the distinction of the three stages in the graphic art above described, I have not mentioned the wonderful powers we derive from it in the language of the mathematics and the language of music. In each of these, tho its effects are already astonishing, there is no doubt but great improvements are still to be made. Our present mode of writing in these, as in literature, belongs to the second or alphabetical stage of the graphic art. The ten ciphers and the other signs used in the mathematical sciences form the alphabet in which the language of those sciences is written. The few musical notes and the other signs which accompany them furnish an alphabet for writing the language of music.

The mode of writing in China is still different from any of those I have mentioned. The Chinese neither paint ideas nor sounds; but they make a character for every word; which character must vary according to the different inflections and uses of that word. The characters must therefore be insupportably numerous and be still increasing as the language is enriched with new words by the augmentation and correction of ideas.

The English language is supposed to contain about twelve thousand distinct words and the Italian about seventeen thousand, in the present state of our sciences. I know not how many the Chinese may contain; but if we were to write our languages in the Chinese method, it would be the business of a whole life for a man to learn his mother tongue, so as to read and write it for his ordinary purposes.

As the Chinese have not adopted an alphabet, but have adhered to an invariable state of the graphic art, which is probably more ancient by several thousand years than our present method, may we not venture to conjecture that the traces of their very ancient history have been, for that reason, better preserved? and that their pretensions to a very high antiquity, which we have been used to think extravagant and ridiculous, are really not without foundation? If so, we might then allow a little more latitude to ourselves, and conclude that we are in fact as old as they and might have been as sensible of it, if we had adhered to our ancient method of writing; and not changed it for a new one which, while it has facilitated the progress of our science, has humbled our pride of antiquity, by obliterating the dates of those labors and improvements of our early progenitors, to which we are indebted for more of the rudiments of our sciences and our arts than we usually imagine.

It is much to be regretted, that the Spanish devastation in Mexico and Peru was so universal as to leave us but few monuments of the history of the human mind in those countries, which presented a state of manners so remarkably different from what can be found in any other part of the world. The pictorial writing of the Mexicans, tho sometimes called hieroglyphic, does not appear to merit that name, as it was not exclusively appropriated by the priests to sacred purposes. Indeed it could not be so appropriated till a more convenient method could be discovered and adopted for common purposes. For a thing cannot become sacred, in this sense of the word, until it ceases to be common.

No. 14.

No Bovadilla seize the tempting spoil,
No dark Ovando, no religious Boyle,

Book II. Line 299.

Bovadilla and Ovando are mentioned in the Introduction as the enemies and successors of Columbus in the government of Hispaniola. They began that system of cruelty towards the natives, which in a few years almost depopulated that island, and was afterwards pursued by Cortez, Pizarro and others, in all the first settlements in Spanish America.

Boyle was a fanatical priest who accompanied Ovando, and, under pretence of christianizing the natives by the sword, gave the sanction of the church to the most shocking and extensive scenes of slaughter.

No. 15.

He gains the shore. Behold his fortress rise,
His fleet high flaming suffocates the skies.

Book II. Line 325.

The conduct of Cortez, when he first landed on the coast of Mexico, was as remarkable for that hardy spirit of adventure, to which success gives the name of policy, as his subsequent operations were for cruelty and perfidy. As soon as his army was on shore, he dismantled his fleet of such articles as would be useful in building a new one; he then set fire to his ships and burnt them in presence of his men, that they might fight their battles with more desperate courage, knowing that it would be impossible to save themselves from a victorious enemy by flight. He constructed a fort, in which the iron and the rigging were preserved.

No. 16.

With cheerful rites their pure devotions pay
To the bright orb that gives the changing day.

Book II. Line 417.

It is worthy of remark, that the countries where the worship of the sun has made the greatest figure are Egypt and Peru; the two regions of the earth the most habitually deprived of rain and probably of clouds, which in other countries so frequently obstruct his rays and seem to dispute his influence. Tho in the rude ages of society it is certainly natural in all countries to pay adoration to the sun, as one of the visible agents of those changes in the atmosphere which most affect the people's happiness, yet it is reasonable to suppose that this adoration would be more unmixed and consequently more durable, in climates where the agency of the sun appears unrivalled and supreme.

On the supposition that Greece and Western Asia, regions whose early traditions are best known to us, derived their first theological ideas from Egypt, it is curious to observe how the pure heliosebia of Egypt degenerated in those climates in proportion as other visible agents seemed to exert their influence in human affairs. Greece is a mountainous country, subject to a great deal of lightning and other meteors, whose effects are tremendous and make stronger impressions on rude savages than the gentle energies of the sun.

The Greeks therefore, having forgotten the source of their religious system, ceased to consider the sun as their supreme god; his agency being in their opinion subject to a more potent divinity, the Power of the air or Jupiter, whom they styled the Thunderer. So that Apollo, the god of light, became in their mythology the subject and offspring of the supreme god of the atmosphere. This religion became extremely confused and complicated with new fables, according to the temperature and other accidents of the different climates thro which it passed. The god of thunder obtained the supreme veneration generally in Europe; known in the south by the name of Jupiter or Zeus and in the north by that of Thor.

Europe in general has an uneven surface and a vapory sky, liable to great concussions in the lower regions of the atmosphere which border the habitation of man. There is no wonder that in such a region the god of the air should appear more powerful than the god of light. This disposition of the elements has given a gloomy cast to the mind, and in the north more than in the south. The Thor of the Celtic nations was more tremendous, more feared and less beloved, than the Jupiter of the Greeks and Romans; he was worshipped accordingly with more bloody sacrifices. But in all Europe, western Asia and the northwestern coast of Africa, where the earth is uneven and the climate variable, their religion was more gloomy and their gods more ferocious than among the ancient Egyptians.

A like difference is observed in the religions of the two countries in America where civilization was most advanced before the arrival of the Spaniards. Peru enjoyed a climate of great serenity and regularity. Of all the sensible agents that operated on the earth and air, the sun was apparently the most uniform and energetic. The worship of the sun was therefore the most predominant and durable; and it inspired a mildness of manners analagous to his mild and beneficent influence. In Mexico and other uneven countries where storms and earthquakes were frequent, the sun, altho he was reckoned among their deities, was not considered so powerful as those of a more boisterous and maleficent nature. The Mexican worship was therefore addressed chiefly to ferocious beings, enemies to human happiness, who delighted in the tears and blood of their votaries. The difference in the moral cast of religion in Peru and Mexico, as well as in Egypt and Greece, must have been greatly owing to climate. Indeed in what else should it be found, since the origin of religious ideas must have been in the energies of those visible agents which form the distinctive character of climates?

No. 17.

Long is the tale; but tho their labors rest
By years obscured, in flowery fiction drest,

Book II. Line 451.

The traditions respecting these founders of the Peruvian empire are indeed obscure; but they excite in us the same sort of veneration that we feel for the most amiable and distinguished characters of remote antiquity. The honest zeal of Garcilasso de la Vega in collecting these traditions into one body of history, as a probable series of facts, is to be applauded; since he has there presented us with one of the most striking examples of the beau ideal in political character, that can be found in the whole range of literature. He treats his subject with more natural simplicity, tho with less talent, than Plutarch or Xenophon, when they undertake a similar task, that of drawing traditional characters to fill up the middle space between fable and history.

With regard to the true position that the portrait of Manco Capac ought to hold in this middle space, how near it should stand to history and how near to fable, we should find it difficult to say and perhaps useless to inquire. Plutarch has gravely given us the lives and actions of several heroes who are evidently more fabulous than Capac, and of others who should be placed on the same line with him. The existence of Theseus, Romulus and Numa is more doubtful and their actions less probable than his. The character of Capac, in regard to its reality, stands on a parallel with that of the Lycurgus of Plutarch and the Cyrus of Xenophon; not purely historical nor purely fabulous, but presented to us as a compendium of those talents and labors which might possibly be crowded into the capacity of one mind and be achieved in one life, but which more probably belong to several generations; the talents and labors that could reduce a great number of ferocious tribes into one peaceable and industrious state.

Garcilasso was himself an Inca by maternal descent, born and educated at Cusco after the Spanish conquest. He writes apparently with the most scrupulous regard to truth, with little judgment and no ornament. He discovers a credulous zeal to throw a lustre on his remote ancestor Manco Capac, not by inventing new incidents, but by collecting with great industry all that had been recorded in the annals of the family. And their manner of recording events, tho not so perfect as that of writing, was not so liable to error as traditions merely oral, like those of the Caledonian and other Celtic bards, with respect to the ancient heroes of their countries.

His account states, that about four centuries previous to the discovery of that country by the Spaniards, the natives of Peru were as rude savages as any in America. They had no fixed habitations, no ideas of permanent property; they wandered naked like the beasts and like them depended on the events of each day for a subsistence. At this period Manco Capac and his wife Mama Oella appeared on a small island in the lake Titiaca, near which the city of Cusco was afterwards built. These persons, to establish a belief of their divinity in the minds of the people, were clothed in white garments of cotton and declared themselves descended from the sun, who was their father and the god of that country. They affirmed that he was offended at their cruel and perpetual wars, their barbarous modes of worship and their neglecting to make the best use of the blessings he was constantly bestowing, in fertilizing the earth and producing vegetation; that he pitied their wretched state and had sent his own children to instruct them and to establish a number of wise regulations, by which they might be rendered happy.

By some uncommon method of persuasion, these persons drew together a few of the savage tribes, laid the foundation of the city of Cusco and established what is called the kingdom of the Sun, or the Peruvian empire. In the reign of Manco Capac, the dominion was extended about eight leagues from the city; and at the end of four centuries it was established fifteen hundred miles on the coast of the Pacific ocean, and from that ocean to the Andes. During this period, thro a succession of twelve monarchs, the original constitution, etablished by the first Inca, remained unaltered; and this constitution, with the empire itself, was at last overtuned by an accident which no human wisdom could foresee or prevent.

For a more particular detail of the character and institutions of this extraordinary personage, the reader is referred to a subsequent note, in which he will find a dissertation on that subject.

In the passage preceding this reference, I have alluded to the fabulous traditions relating to these children of the sun. In the remainder of the second and thro the whole of the third book, I have given what may be supposed a probable narrative of their real origin and actions. The space allowed to this episode may appear too considerable in a poem whose principal object is so different. But it may be useful to exhibit in action the manners and sentiments of savage tribes, whose aliment is war; that the contrast may show more forcibly the advantages of civilized life, whose aliment is peace.

Long robes of white my shoulders must embrace
To speak my lineage of etherial race;

Book II. Line 549.

As the art of spinning is said to have been invented by Oella, it is no improbable fiction to imagine that they first assumed these white garments of cotton as an emblem of the sun, in order to inspire that reverence for their persons which was necessary to their success. Such a dress may likewise be supposed to have continued in the family as a badge of royalty.

No. 19.

DISSERTATION ON THE INSTITUTIONS OF MANCO CAPAC.

For the end of Book II.

Altho the original inhabitants of America in general deserve to be classed among the most unimproved savages that had been discovered before those of New Holland, yet the Mexican and Peruvian governments exhibited remarkable exceptions, and seemed to be fast approaching to a state of civilization. In the difference of national character between the people of these two empires we may discern the influence of political systems on the human mind, and infer the importance of the task which a legislator undertakes, in attempting to reduce a barbarous people under the control of government and laws.

The Mexican constitution was formed to render its subjects brave and powerful; but, while it succeeded in this object, it kept them far removed from the real blessings of society. According to the Spanish accounts (which for an obvious reason may however be suspected of exaggeration) the manners of the Mexicans were uncommonly ferocious, and their religion gloomy, sanguinary and unrelenting. But the establishments of Manco Capac, if we may follow Garcilasso in attributing the whole of the Peruvian constitution to that wonderful personage, present the aspect of a most benevolent and pacific system; they tended to humanize the world and render his people happy; while his ideas of deity were so elevated as to bear a comparison with the sublime doctrines of Socrates or Plato.

The characters, whether real or fabulous, who are the most distinguished as lawgivers among barbarous nations, are Moses, Lycurgus, Solon, Numa, Mahomet, and Peter of Russia. Of these, only the two former and the two latter appear really to deserve the character of lawgivers. Solon and Numa possessed not the opportunity of showing their talents in the work of original legislation. Athens and Rome were considerably civilized before these persons arose. The most they could do was to correct and amend constitutions already formed. Solon may be considered as a wise politician, but by no means as the founder of a nation. The Athenians were too far advanced in society to admit any radical change in their form of government; unless recourse could have been had to the representative system, by establishing an equality of rank and instructing all the people in their duties and their rights; a system which was never understood by any ancient legislator.

The institutions of Numa (if such a person as Numa really existed) were more effective and durable. His religious ceremonies were for many ages the most powerful check on the licentious and turbulent Romans; the greater part of whom were ignorant slaves. By inculcating a remarkable reverence for the gods and making it necessary to consult the auspices when any thing important was to be transacted, his object was to render the popular superstition subservient to the views of policy and thus to give the senate a steady check upon the plebeians. But the constitutions of Rome and Athens, notwithstanding the abundant applause that has been bestowed upon them, were never fixed on any permanent principles; tho the wisdom of some of their rulers and the spirit of liberty that inspired the citizens may justly demand our admiration.

Each of the other legislators above mentioned deserves a particular consideration, as having acted in stations somewhat similar to that of the Peruvian patriarch. Three objects are to be attended to by the legislator of a barbarous people: First, That his system be such as is capable of reducing the greatest number of men under one jurisdiction: Second, That it apply to such principles in human nature for its support as are universal and permanent, in order to insure the duration of the government: Third, That it admit of improvements correspondent to any advancement in knowledge or variation of circumstances that may happen to its subjects, without endangering the principle of government by such innovations. So far as the systems of such legislators agree with these fundamental principles, they are worthy of respect; and so far as they deviate, they may be considered as defective.

To begin with Moses and Lycurgus: it is proper to observe that in order to judge of the merit of any institutions, we must take into view the peculiar character of the people for whom they were framed. For want of this attention, many of the laws of Moses and some of those of Lycurgus have been ridiculed and censured. The Jews, when led by Moses out of Egypt, were not only uncivilized, but having just risen to independence from a state of servitude they united the manners of servants and savages, and their national character was a compound of servility, ignorance, filthiness and cruelty. Of their cruelty as a people we need no other proof than the account of their avengers of blood and the readiness with which the whole congregation turned executioners and stoned to death the devoted offenders. The leprosy, a disease now scarcely known, was undoubtedly produced by a want of cleanliness, continued for successive generations. In this view their frequent ablutions, their peculiar modes of trial and several other institutions may be vindicated from ridicule and proved to be wise regulations.

The Spartan lawgiver has been censured for the toleration of theft and adultery. Among that race of barbarians these habits were too general to admit of total prevention or universal punishment. By vesting all property in the commonwealth, instead of encouraging theft he removed the possibility of the crime; and, in a nation where licentiousness was generally indulged, it was a great step towards introducing a purity of manners, to punish adultery in all cases wherein it was committed without the consent of all parties interested in its consequences.

Until the institution of representative republics, which are of recent date, it was found that those constitutions of government were best calculated for immediate energy and duration, which were interwoven with some religious system. The legislator who appears in the character of an inspired person renders his political institutions sacred and interests the conscience as well as the judgment in their support. The Jewish lawgiver had this advantage over the Spartan: he appeared not in the character of a mere earthly governor, but as an interpreter of the divine will. By enjoining a religious observance of certain rites he formed his people to habitual obedience; by directing their cruelty against the breakers of the laws he at least mitigated the rancor of private hatred; by directing that real property should return to the original families in the year of Jubilee he prevented too great an inequality of wealth; and by selecting a single tribe to be the interpreters of religion he prevented its mysteries from being the subject of profane and vulgar investigation. With a view of securing the permanence of his institutions, he prohibited intercourse with foreigners by severe restrictions and formed his people to habits and a character disagreeable to other nations; so that any foreign intercourse was prevented by the mutual hatred of both parties.

To these institutions the laws of Lycurgus bear a striking resemblance. The features of his constitution were severe and forbidding; it was however calculated to inspire the most enthusiastic love of liberty and martial honor. In no country was the patriotic passion more energetic than in Sparta; no laws ever excluded the idea of separate property in an equal degree or inspired a greater contempt for the manners of other nations. The prohibition of money, commerce and almost every thing desirable to effeminate nations, excluded foreigners from Sparta; and while it inspired the people with contempt for strangers it made them agreeable to each other. By these means Lycurgus rendered the nation warlike; and to insure the duration of the government he endeavored to interest the consciences of his people by the aid of oracles and by the oath he is said to have exacted from them to obey his laws till his return, when he went into perpetual exile.

From this view of the Jewish and Spartan institutions, applied to the principles before stated, they appear in the two first articles considerably imperfect, and in the last totally defective. Neither of them was calculated to bring any considerable territory or number of men under one jurisdiction; from this circumstance alone they could not be rendered permanent, as nations so restricted in their means of extension must be constantly exposed to their more powerful neighbors. But the third object of legislation, that of providing for the future progress of society, which as it regards the happiness of mankind is the most important of the three, was in both instances entirely neglected. These systems appear to have been formed with an express design to prevent future improvement in knowledge or enlargement of the human mind, and to fix those nations in a state of ignorance and barbarism. To vindicate their authors from an imputation of weakness or inattention in this particular, it may be urged that they were each of them surrounded by nations more powerful than their own; it was therefore perhaps impossible for them to commence an establishment upon any other plan.

The institutions of Mahomet are next to be considered. The first object of legislation appears to have been better understood by him than by either of the preceding sages; his jurisdiction was capable of being enlarged to any extent of territory, and governing any number of nations that might be subjugated by his enthusiastic armies; and his system of religion was admirably calculated to attain this object. Like Moses, he convinced his people that he acted as the vicegerent of God; but with this advantage, adapting his religion to the natural feelings and propensities of mankind, he multiplied his followers by the allurements of pleasure and the promise of a sensual paradise. These circumstances were likewise sure to render his constitution durable. His religious system was so easy to be understood, so splendid and so inviting, there could be no danger that the people would lose sight of its principles, and no necessity of future prophets to explain its doctrines or reform the nation. To these advantages if we add the exact and rigid military discipline, the splendor and sacredness of the monarch and that total ignorance among the people which such a system will produce and perpetuate, the establishment must have been evidently calculated for a considerable extent and duration. But the last and most important end of government, that of mental improvement and social happiness, was deplorably lost in the institution. There was probably more learning and cultivated genius in Arabia in the days of this extraordinary man than can now be found in all the Mahometan dominions.

On the contrary, the enterprising mind of the Russian monarch appears to have been wholly bent on the arts of civilization and the improvement of society among his subjects. Established in a legal title to a throne, which already commanded a prodigious extent of country, he found the first object of government already secured; and by applying himself with great sagacity to the third object, that of improving his people, it was reasonable to suppose that the second, the durability of his system, would become a necessary consequence. He effected his purposes, important as they were, merely by the introduction of the arts and the encouragement of politer manners. The greatness of his character appears not so much in his institutions, which he copied from other nations, as in the extraordinary measures he followed to introduce them, the judgment he showed in selecting and adapting them to the genius of his subjects and the surprising assiduity by which he raised a savage people to an elevated rank among European nations.

To the nature and operation of the several forms of government above mentioned I will compare that of the Peruvian lawgiver. I have observed in a preceding note that the knowledge we have of Manco Capac is necessarily imperfect and obscure, derived thro traditions and family registers (without the aid of writing) for four hundred years: from the time he is supposed to have lived, till that of his historian and descendant, Inca Garcilasso de la Vega. About an equal interval elapsed from the supposed epoch of the first kings of Rome to that of their first historians; a longer space from Lycurgus to Herodotus; probably not a shorter one from the time of the great Cyrus to that of Xenophon, author of the elegant romance on the actions of that hero.

I recal the reader's attention to these comparisons, not with a view of contending that our accounts of the actions ascribed to Capac are derived from authentic records, and that he is a subject of real history, like Mahomet or Peter; but to show that our channels of information with regard to him being equally respectable with those that have brought us acquainted with the classical and venerable names of Lycurgus, Romulus, Numa and Cyrus, we may be as correct in our reasonings from the modern as from the ancient source of reference, and fancy ourselves treading a ground as sacred on the tomb of the western patriarch, as on those more frequented and less scrutinized in the east, consecrated to the demigods of Sparta, Rome and Persia.

It is probable that the savages of Peru before the time of Capac, among other objects of adoration, paid homage to the sun. By availing himself of this popular sentiment he appeared, like Moses and Mahomet, in the character of a divine legislator endowed with supernatural powers. After impressing these ideas on the minds of the people, drawing together a number of the tribes and rendering them subservient to his benevolent purposes, he applied himself to forming the outlines of a plan of policy, capable of founding and regulating an extensive empire, wisely calculated for long duration and well adapted to improve the knowledge, peace and happiness of a considerable portion of mankind. In the allotment of the lands as private property he invented a mode somewhat resembling the feudal system of Europe: yet this system was checked in its operation by a law similar to that of Moses which regulated landed possessions in the year of Jubilee. He divided the lands into three parts: the first was consecrated to the uses of religion; as it was from the sacerdotal part of his system that he doubtless expected its most powerful support. The second portion was set apart for the Inca and his family, to enable him to defray the expenses of government and appear in the style of a monarch. The third and largest portion was allotted to the people; which allotment was repeated every year and varied according to the number and exigences of each family.

As the Incan race appeared in the character of divinities, it seemed necessary that a subordination of rank should be established, to render the distinction between the monarch and his people more perceptible. With this view he created a band of nobles who were distinguished by personal and hereditary honors. These were united to the monarch by the strongest ties of interest: in peace they acted as judges and superintended the police of the empire; in war they commanded in the armies. The next order of men were the respectable landholders and cultivators, who composed the principal strength of the nation. Below these was a class of men who were the servants of the public and cultivated the public lands. They possessed no property; and their security depended on their regular industry and peaceable demeanor. Above all these orders were the Inca and his family. He possessed absolute and uncontrolable power. His mandates were regarded as the word of heaven; and the double guilt of impiety and rebellion attended on disobedience.

To impress the utmost veneration for the Incan family it was a fundamental principle that the royal blood should never be contaminated by any foreign alliance. The mysteries of religion were preserved sacred by the high priest of the royal family under the control of the king, and celebrated with rites capable of making the deepest impression on the multitude. The annual distribution of the lands, while it provided for the varying circumstances of each family, was designed to strengthen the bands of society by perpetuating that distinction of rank among the orders which is supposed necessary to a monarchical government: the peasants could not vie with their superiors, and the nobles could not be subjected by misfortune to a subordinate station. A constant habit of industry was inculcated upon all ranks by the force of example. The cultivation of the soil, which in most other countries is considered as one of the lowest employments, was here regarded as a divine art. Having had no knowledge of it before and being taught it by the children of their god, the people viewed it as a sacred privilege, a national honor, to assist the sun in opening the bosom of the earth to produce vegetation. That the government might be able to exercise the endearing acts of beneficence, the produce of the public lands was reserved in magazines to supply the wants of the unfortunate and as a resource in case of scarcity or invasion.

These are the outlines of a government the most simple and energetic, and at least as capable as any monarchy within our knowledge of reducing great and populous countries under one jurisdiction; at the same time, accommodating its principle to every stage of improvement, by a singular and happy application to the passions of the human mind, it encouraged the advancement of knowledge without being endangered by success.

In the traits of character which distinguish this institution we may discern all the great principles of each of the legislators above mentioned. The pretensions of Capac to divine authority were as artfully contrived and as effectual in their consequences as those of Mahomet; his exploding the worship of evil beings and objects of terror, forbidding human sacrifices and accommodating the rites of worship to a god of justice and benevolence, produced a greater change in the national character of his people than the laws of Moses did in his; like Peter he provided for the future improvement of society, while his actions were never measured on the contracted scale which limited the genius of Lycurgus.

Thus far we find that altho the political system of Capac did not embrace that extensive scope of human nature which is necessary in forming republican institutions, and which can be drawn only from long and well recorded experience of the passions and tendencies of social man, yet it must be pronounced at least equal to those of the most celebrated monarchical law-givers, whether ancient or modern. But in some things his mind seems to have attained an elevation with which few of theirs will bear a comparison: I mean in his religious institutions and the exalted ideas he had formed of the agency and attributes of supernatural beings.

From what source he could have drawn these ideas it is difficult to form a satisfactory conjecture. The worship of the sun is so natural to an early state of society, in a mild climate with a clear atmosphere, that it may be as reasonable to suppose it would originate in Peru as in Egypt or Persia; where we find that a similar worship did originate and was wrought into a splendid system; whence it was probably extended, with various modifications, over most of the ancient world.

Or if we reject this theory and suppose that only one nation, from some circumstance peculiar to itself, could create the materials of such a system, and has consequently had the privilege of giving its religion to the human race, we may in this case imagine that the Phenicians (who colonized Cadiz and other places in the west of Europe at the time when they possessed the solar worship in all its glory) must have had a vessel driven across the Atlantic, and thus conveyed a stock of inhabitants with their own religious ideas to the western continent.

The first theory is doubtless the most plausible. And the mild regions of Peru, for the reasons mentioned in a former note, became like Egypt the seat of an institution so congenial to its climate. But in more boisterous climates, where storms and other violent agents prevail, many different fables have wrought themselves into the system, as remarked in the same note; and the solar religion in such countries has generally lost its name and the more beneficent parts of its influence. Being thus corrupted, religion in almost every part of the earth assumed a gloomy and sanguinary character.

Savage nations create their gods from such materials as they have at hand, the most striking to their senses. And these are in general an assemblage of destructive attributes. They usually form no idea of a general superintending providence: they consider not their god as the author of their beings, the creator of the world and the dispenser of the happiness they enjoy. They discern him not in the usual course of nature, in the sunshine and in the shower, the productions of the earth and the blessings of society. They find a deity only in the storm, the earthquake and the whirlwind; or ascribe to him the evils of pestilence and famine. They consider him as interposing in wrath to change the course of nature and exercise the attributes of rage and revenge. They adore him with rites suited to these attributes, with horror, with penance and with sacrifice. They imagine him pleased with the severity of their mortifications, with the oblations of blood and the cries of human victims; and they hope to compound for greater judgments by voluntary sufferings and horrid sacrifices, suited to the relish of his taste.

Perhaps no single criterion can be given which will determine more accurately the state of society in any age or nation than their general ideas concerning the nature and attributes of deity. In the most enlightened periods of antiquity, only a few of their philosophers, a Socrates, Tully or Confucius, ever formed a rational idea on the subject, or described a god of purity, justice and benevolence. But Capac, erecting his institutions in a country where the visible agents of nature inspired more satisfactory feelings, adopted a milder system. As the sun with its undisturbed influence seemed to point itself out as the supreme controller and vital principle of nature, he formed the idea, as the Egyptians had done before, of constituting that luminary the chief object of adoration. He taught the nation to consider the sun as the parent of the universe, the god of order and regularity; ascribing to his influence the rotation of the seasons, the productions of the earth and the blessings of health; especially attributing to his inspiration the wisdom of their laws and that happy constitution which was the delight and veneration of the people.

A system so just and benevolent, as might be expected, was attended with success. In about four centuries the dominion of the Incas had extended fifteen hundred miles in length and had introduced peace and prosperity thro the whole region. The arts of society had been carried to a considerable degree of improvement and the authority of the Incan race universally acknowledged, when an event happened which disturbed the tranquillity of the empire. Huana Capac, the twelfth monarch, had reduced the powerful kingdom of Quito and annexed it to his dominions. To conciliate the affections of his new subjects, he married a daughter of the ancient king of Quito, who was not of the race of the Incas. Thus, by violating a fundamental law of the empire, he left at his death a disputed succession to the throne. Atabalipa, the son of Huana by the heiress of Quito, being in possession of the principal force of the Peruvian armies left at that place on the death of his father, gave battle to his brother Huascar, who was the elder son of Huana by a lawful wife, and legal heir to the crown.

After a long and destructive civil war the former was victorious, and thus was that flourishing kingdom left a prey to regal dissensions and to the few soldiers of Pizarro, who happened at that juncture to make a descent upon the coast. In this manner he effected an easy conquest and an utter destruction of a numerous, brave, unfortunate people.

It is however obvious that this deplorable event is not to be charged on Capac, as the consequence of any defect in his institution. It is impossible that an original legislator should effectually guard against the folly of all future sovereigns. Capac had not only removed every temptation that could induce a wise prince to wish for a change in the constitution, but had connected the ruin of his authority with the change; for he who disregards any part of institutions deemed sacred, teaches his people to consider the whole as an imposture. Had he made a law ordaining that the Peruvians should be absolved from their allegiance to a prince who should violate the laws, it would have implied possible error and imperfection in those persons whom the people were ordered to regard as divinities. The reverence due to characters who made such high pretensions would have been weakened; and instead of rendering the constitution perfect, such a law would have been its greatest defect. Besides, it is probable the rupture might have been healed and the succession settled, with as little difficulty as frequently happens with partial revolutions in other kingdoms, had not the descent of the Spaniards prevented it. And this event, for that age and country, must have been beyond the possibility of human foresight. But viewing the concurrence of these fatal accidents, which reduced this flourishing empire to a level with many other ruined and departed kingdoms, it only furnishes an additional proof that no political system has yet had the privilege to be perfect.

On the whole it is evident that the system of Capac (if the Peruvian constitution may be so called) is one of the greatest exertions of genius to be found in the history of mankind. When we consider him as an individual emerging from the midst of a barbarous people, having seen no example of the operation of laws in any country, originating a plan of religion and policy never equalled by the sages of antiquity, civilizing an extensive empire and rendering religion and government subservient to the general happiness of a great people, there is no danger that we grow too warm in his praise or pronounce too high an eulogium on his character.

Book III. Line 136.

The lautu was a cotton band, twisted and worn on the head of the Incas as a badge of royalty. It made several turns round the head; and, according to the description of Garcilasso, it must have resembled the Turkish turban.

It is possible that both the lautu and the turban had their remote origin in the ancient astronomical religion, whose principal god was the sun and usually represented under the figure of a man with the horns of the ram; that is, the sun in the sign of aries. The form of the lautu and of the turban (which I suppose to be the same) seems to indicate that they were originally designed as emblems or badges; and when properly twisted and wound round the head, as Turks of distinction usually wear the turban, they resemble the horns of the ram as represented in those figures of Jupiter Ammon where the horns curl close to the head.

There is an engraving in Garcilasso representing the first Inca and his wife, Capac and Oella; and the heads of both are ornamented with rams' horns projecting out from the lautu. Whether the figures of these personages were usually so represented in Peru previous to the Spanish devastation, would be difficult at this day to ascertain. If it could be ascertained that they were usually so represented there, we might esteem it a remarkable circumstance in proof of the unity of the origin of their religion with that of the ancient Egyptians; from which all the early theological systems of Asia and Europe, as far as they have come to our knowledge, were evidently derived.

Book III. Line 274.

The historian of the Incas relates that by the laws of the empire none but sacred fire could be used in sacrifices; and that there were three modes in which it might be procured. First, the most sacred fire was that which was drawn immediately from the sun himself by means of a concave mirror, which was usually made of gold or silver highly polished. Second, in case of cloudy weather or other accident, the fire might be taken from the temple, where it was preserved by the holy virgins, whose functions and discipline resembled those of the vestals of Rome. Third, when the sacrifice was to be made in the provinces at an inconvenient distance from the temple, and when the weather was such as to prevent drawing the fire immediately from the sun, it was permitted to procure it by the friction of two pieces of dry wood.

The two latter modes were resorted to only in cases of necessity. Not to be able to obtain fire by means of the mirror was a bad omen, a sign of displeasure in the god; it cast a gloom over the whole ceremony and threw the people into lamentations, fearing their offering would not be well received.

This method of procuring fire directly from the sun, to burn a sacrifice, must have appeared so miraculous to the savages who could not understand it, that it doubtless had a powerful effect in converting them to the solar religion and to the Incan government.

Las Casas. Valverde. Gasca.

Book IV. Line 17—27.

Barthalomew de las Casas was a dominican priest of a most amiable and heroic character. He first went to Hispaniola with Columbus in his second voyage, where he manifested an ardent but honest zeal, first in attempting to instruct the natives in the principles of the catholic faith and afterwards in defending them against the insufferable cruelties exercised by the Spanish tyrants who succeeded Columbus in the discoveries and settlements in South America. He early declared himself Protector of the Indians; a title which seems to have been acknowledged by the Spanish government. He devoted himself ever after to the most indefatigable labors in the service of that unhappy people. He made several voyages to Spain to solicit, first from Ferdinand, then from cardinal Ximenes and finally from Charles V, some effectual restrictions against the horrid career of depopulation which every where attended the Spanish arms. He followed these monsters of cruelty into all the conquered countries; where, by the power of his eloquence and that purity of morals which commands respect even from the worst of men, he doubtless saved the lives of many thousands of innocent people. His life was a continued struggle against that deplorable system of tyranny, of which he gives a description in a treatise addressed to Philip prince of Spain, entitled Brevissima Relacion de la Destruycion de las Yndias.

It is said by the Spanish writers that the inhabitants of Hispaniola, when first discovered by the Spaniards, amounted to more than one million. This incredible population was reduced in fifteen years to sixty thousand souls.

Vincent Valverde was a fanatical priest who accompanied Pizarro in his destructive expedition to Peru. If we were to search the history of mankind we should not find another such example of the united efforts of ecclesiastical hypocrisy and military ferocity, of unresisted murder and insatiable plunder, as we meet with in the account of this expedition.

Father Valverde in a formal manner gave the sanction of the church to the treacherous murder of Atabalipa and his relations; which was immediately followed by the destruction and almost entire depopulation of a flourishing empire.

Pedro de la Gasca was one of the few men whose virtues form

a singular contrast with the vices which disgraced the age in which he lived and the country in which he acquired his glory. He was sent over to Peru by Charles V, without any military force, to quell the rebellion of the younger Pizarro and to prevent a second depopulation, by a civil war, of that country which had just been drenched in the blood of its original inhabitants. He effected this great purpose by the weight only of his personal authority and the veneration inspired by his virtues. As soon as he had suppressed the rebellion and established the government of the colony he hastened to resign his authority into the hands of his master. And tho his victories had been obtained in the richest country on earth he returned to Spain as poor as Cincinnatus; having resisted every temptation to plunder and refused to receive any emolument for his services.

This circumstance alone would have made of human society by this time a state totally different from what we actually experience; and its influence on the progress of improvement in national happiness and general civilization must have been beyond our ordinary calculation.

While kings and ministers obstruct the plan,
Unfaithful guardians of the weal of man,

Book IV. Line 529.

The British colonies in all their early struggles for existence complained, and with reason, of the uniform indifference and discouragement which they experienced from the government of the mother country. But it was probably to that very indifference that they owed the remarkable spirit of liberty and self dependence which created their prosperity, by inducing them uniformly to adopt republican institutions. These circumstances prepared the way for that mutual confidence and federal union which have finally formed them into a flourishing nation.

Ministers who feel their power over a distant colony to be uncontrolled are so naturally inclined to govern too much, that it may be a fortunate circumstance for the colony to be neglected altogether. This neglect was indeed fatal to the first Virginia settlers sent out by sir Walter Raleigh; and the companies who afterwards succeeded in their establishments at Jamestown in Virginia and at Plymouth in Massachusetts were very near sharing the fate of their predecessors. But after these settlements had acquired so much consistence as to assure their own continuance, it may be assumed as an historical fact, that the want of encouragement from government was rather beneficial than detrimental to the British colonies in general.

These establishments were in the nature of private adventures, undertaken by a few individuals at their own expense, rather than organized colonies sent abroad for a public purpose. They were companies incorporated for plantation and trade. All they asked of the mother country (after obtaining acts of incorporation enabling them to acquire property and exercise other civil functions, such as incorporated companies at home could exercise) was to give them charters of political franchise, ascertaining the extent and limits of their rights and duties as subjects of the British crown forming nations in parts of the earth that had been found in an uncultivated state and far removed from the mother country.

As they could not in this situation be represented in the parliament of England, these charters stipulated their right of having parliaments or legislative assemblies of their own, with executive and judiciary institutions established within their territories.

The acknowledgment of these rights placed them on a different footing from any other modern colonies; and the restricting clause, by which their trade was confined to the mother country, rendered their situation unlike that of the colonies of ancient Greece. Indeed the British system of colonization in America differed essentially from every other, whether ancient or modern; if that may properly be called a system, which was rather the result of early indifference to the cries of needy adventurers, and subsequent attempts to seize upon their earnings when they became objects of rapacity. This singular train of difficulties must be considered as one of the causes of our ancient prosperity and present freedom.

Where Freedom's sons their high born lineage trace
And homebred bravery still exalts the race:

Book V. Line 343.

The author of this poem will not be suspected of laying any stress on the mere circumstance of lineage or birth, as relating either to families or nations. The phrase, however, in the text is not without its meaning. Among the colonies derived from the several nations of Europe in modern times, those from the English have flourished far better than the others, under a parity of circumstances, such as climate, soil and productions. The reason of this undeniable fact deserves to be explained.

Colonies naturally carry with them the civil, political and religious institutions of their mother countries. These institutions in England are much more favorable to liberty and the development of industry than in any other part of Europe which has sent colonies abroad. But this is not all: when men for several generations have been bred up in the habit of feeling and exercising such a portion of liberty as the English nation has enjoyed, their minds are prepared to open and expand themselves as occasion may offer. They are able to embrace new circumstances, to perceive the improvements that may be drawn from them, and not only make a temperate use of that portion of self-control to which they are accustomed, but devise the means of extending it to other objects of their political relations, till they become familiar with all the interests of men in society.

The habitual use of the liberty of the press, of trial by jury in open court, of the accountability of public agents and of some voice in the election of legislators, must create, in a man or a nation, a character quite different from what it could be under the habitual disuse of these advantages. And when these habits are transplanted with a young colony to a distant region of the earth, enjoying a good soil and climate, with an unlimited and unoccupied country, the difference will necessarily be more remarkable.

A most striking illustration of this principle is exhibited in the colonies of North America. This coast, from the St. Lawrence to the Missisipi, was colonized by the French and English. (I make no account of the Dutch establishment on the Hudson nor of the Swedish on the Delaware; they being of little importance and early absorbed in the English settlements.) If we look back only one hundred years from the present time, we find the French and English dominions here about equally important in point of extent and population. The French Canada, Acadia, Cape Breton, Newfoundland, Florida and Louisiana were then as far advanced in improvement as the English settlements which they flanked on each side. And the French had greatly the advantage in point of soil, interior navigation and capability of extension. They commanded and possessed the two great rivers which almost met together on the English frontier. And the space between the waters of those rivers on the west was planted with French military posts, so as to complete the investment.

New Orleans was begun before Philadelphia and was much better situated to become a great commercial capital. Quebec and Montreal were older, and had the advantage of most of our other cities. Add to this that the French nation at home was about twice as populous as the English nation at home; and as that part of the increase of colonial population which comes from emigration must naturally be derived from their respective mother countries, it might have been expected that the comparative rapidity of increase would have been in favor of the French at least two to one.

But the French colonists had not been habituated to the use of liberty before their emigration, and they were not prepared nor permitted to enjoy it in any degree afterwards. Their laws were made for them in their mother country, by men who could not know their wants and who felt no interest in their prosperity; and then they were administered by a set of agents as ignorant as their masters; men who, from the nature of their employment and accountability, must in general be oppressive and rapacious.

The result has solved a great problem in political combination. One of these clusters of colonies has grown to a powerful empire, giving examples to the universe in most of the great objects which constitute the dignity of nations. The other, after having been a constant expense to the mother country and serving for barter and exchange in the capricious vicissitudes of European despotism, presents altogether at this day a mass of population and wealth scarcely equal to one of our provinces.

This note is written at the moment when Louisiana, one of the most extensive but least peopled of the French colonies, is ceded to the United States. The world will see how far the above theory will now be confined by the rapid increase of population and improvement in that interesting portion of our continent.

Eripuit cœlo fulmen, sceptrumque tyrannis.

This epigraph, written by Turgot on the bust of Franklin, seems to have been imitated from a line in Manilius; where noticing the progress of science in ascribing things to their natural and proper causes instead of supernatural ones, he says,

Eripuit Jovi fulmen, viresque tonandi,
Et sonitum ventis concessit, nubibus ignem.

Ultima ratio regum: a device of Louis XIV, engraved on his ordnance, and afterwards adopted by other powers. When we consider men as reasonable beings and endowed with the qualities requisite for living together in society, this device looks like a satire upon the species; but in reality it only proves the imperfect state to which their own principles of society have yet advanced them in the long and perhaps interminable progress of which they are susceptible. This ultima ratio being already taken out of the hands of individuals and confided only to the chiefs of nations, is as clear a proof of a great progress already made, as its remaining in the hands of those chiefs is a proof that we still remain far short of that degree of wisdom and experience which will enable all the nations to live at peace one with another.

There certainly was a time when the same device might have been written on the hatchet or club or fist of every man; and the best weapon of destruction that he could wield against his neighbor might have been called ultima ratio virorum, meaning that human reason could go no farther. But the wisdom we have drawn from experience has taught us to restrain the use of mortal weapons, making it unlawful and showing it to be unreasonable to use them in private disputes. The principles of social intercourse and the advantages of peace are so far understood as to enable men to form great societies and to submit their personal misunderstandings to common judges; thus removing the ultima ratio from their own private hands to the hands of their government.

Hitherto there has usually been a government to every nation; but the nations are increasing in size and diminishing in number;

so that the hands which now hold the ultima ratio by delegation are few, compared with what they have been. I mean this observation to apply only to those extensions of nationality which have been formed on the true principles of society and acquiesced in from a sense of their utility. I mean not to apply it to those unnatural and unwieldy stretches of power, whose overthrow is often and erroneously cited as an argument against the progress of civilization; such as the conquests of Alexander, the Roman generals, Omar, Gengis Khan and others of that brilliant description. These are but meteors of compulsive force, which pass away and discourage, rather than promote, the spirit of national extension of which I speak.

This spirit operates constantly and kindly; nor is its progress so slow but that it is easily perceived. Even within the short memorials of modern history we find a heptarchy in England. Ossian informs us that in his time there was a great number of warlike states in Ireland and as many more in Scotland. Without going back to the writings of Julius Cesar to discover the comparative condition of France, we may almost remember when she counted within her limits six or seven different governments, generally at war among themselves and inviting foreign enemies to come and help them to destroy each other. Every province in Spain is still called a kingdom; and it is not long since they were really so in fact, with the ultima ratio in the hands of every king.

The publicist who in any of those modern heroic ages could have imagined that all the hundred nations who inhabited the western borders of Europe, from the Orknies to Gibraltar, might one day become so far united in manners and interests as to form but three great nations, would certainly have passed for a madman. Had he been a minister of Pharamond or of Fingal he could no more have kept his place than Turgot could keep his after pointing out the means of promoting industry and preventing wars. He would have been told that the inhabitants of each side of the Humber were natural enemies

one to the other; that if their chiefs were even disposed to live in peace they could not do it; their subjects would demand war and could not live without it. The same would have been said of the Seine, the Loire and every other dividing line between their petty communities. It would have been insisted on that such rivers were the natural boundaries of states and never could be otherwise.

But now, since the people of those districts find themselves no longer on the frontiers of little warlike states, but in the centre of great industrious nations, they have lost their relish for war and consider it as a terrible calamity. They cherish the minister who gives them peace and abhor the one who drives them into unnecessary wars. Their local disputes, which used to be settled by the sword, are now referred to the tribunals of the country. They have substituted a moral to a physical force. They have changed the habits of plunder for those of industry, and they find themselves richer and happier for the change.

Who will say that the progress of society will stop short in the present stage of its career? that great communities will not discover a mode of arbitrating their disputes, as little ones have done? that nations will not lay aside their present ideas of independence and rivalship and find themselves more happy and more secure in one great universal society, which shall contain within itself its own principles of defence, its own permanent security? It is evident that national security, in order to be permanent, must be founded on the moral force of society at large, and not on the physical force of each nation independently exerted. The ultima ratio must not be a cannon, but a reference to some rational mode of decision worthy of rational beings.

Else what high tones of rapture must have told
The first great action of a chief so bold.

Book V. Line 765.

General Arnold, the leader of this detachment, had acquired by this and many other brilliant achievements a degree of military fame almost unequalled among the American generals. His shameful defection afterwards, by the foulest of treason, should be lamented as a national dishonor; it has not only obliterated his own glory, but it seems in some sort to have cast a shade on that of others whose brave actions had been associated with his in the acquisition of their common and unadulterated fame.

The action here alluded to, the march thro the wilderness from Casco to Quebec, was compared in the gazettes of that day to the passage of the Alps by Hannibal. And really, considered as a scene of true military valor, patient suffering and heroic exertion, (detached from the idea of subsequent success in the ulterior expedition) the comparison did not disgrace the Carthaginian.

Yet since the defection of Arnold, which happened five years afterwards, this audacious and once celebrated exploit is scarcely mentioned in our annals. And Meigs, Dearborn, Morgan and other distinguished officers in the expedition, whom that alone might have immortalized, have been indebted to their subsequent exertions of patriotic valor for the share of celebrity their names now enjoy.

See the character of Arnold treated more at large in the sixth book.

Book VI. Line 35.

The systematic and inflexible course of cruelties exercised by the British armies on American prisoners during the three first years of the war were doubtless unexampled among civilized nations. Considering it as a war against rebels, neither their officers nor soldiers conceived themselves bound by the ordinary laws of war.

The detail of facts on this subject, especially in what concerned the prison ships, has not been sufficiently noticed in our annals; at least not so much noticed as the interest of public morals would seem to require. Mr. Boudinot, who was the American commissary of prisoners at the time, has since informed the author of this poem that in one prison ship alone, called the Jersey, which was anchored near Newyork, eleven thousand American prisoners died in eighteen months; almost the whole of them from the barbarous treatment of being stifled in a crowded hold with infected air, and poisoned with unwholesome food.

There were several other prison ships, as well as the sugar-house prison in the city, whose histories ought to be better known than they are. I say this not from any sort of enmity to the British nation, for I have none. I respect the British nation; as will be evident from the views I have given of her genius and institutions in the course of this work. I would at all times render that nation every service consistent with my duty to my own; and surely it is worthy of her magnanimity to consider as a real service every true information given her relative to the crimes of her agents in distant countries. These crimes are as contrary to the spirit of the nation at home as they are to the temper of her laws.

His savage hordes the murderous Johnson leads,
Files thro the woods and treads the tangled weeds,

Book VI. Line 589.

This was general sir John Johnson, an American royalist in the British service. He was the son of sir William Johnson, who had been a rich proprietor and inhabitant in the Mohawk country in the colony of Newyork, and had been employed by the king as superintendant of Indian affairs. Sir William had married a Mohawk savage wife; and it was supposed that the great influence which he had long exercised over that and the neighboring tribes must have descended to his son. It was on this account that he was employed on the expedition of Burgoyne, in which he had the rank of brigadier general and the special direction of the savages.

No. 41.

Are these thy trophies, Carleton! these the swords
Thy hand unsheath'd and gave the savage hordes,

Book VI. Line 685.

General sir Guy Carleton, afterwards lord Dorchester, was the British governor of Canada and superintendant of Indian affairs at the time of Burgoyne's campaign. Having great influence with the warlike tribes who inhabited the west of Canada and the borders of the lakes, he was ordered by the minister to adopt the barbarous and unjustifiable measure of arming and bringing them into the king's service in aid of this expedition.

This was doubtless done with the consent of Burgoyne, tho he seems to have been apprehensive of the difficulty of managing a race of men whose manners were so ferocious and whose motives to action must have been so different from those of the principal parties in the war. Burgoyne, in his narrative of this campaign, informs us that he took precautions to discourage that inhuman mode of warfare which had been customary among those savages. He ordered them to kill none but such persons as they should find in arms fighting against the king's troops; to spare old men, women, children and prisoners, and not to scalp any but such as they should kill in open war. He intimated to them that he should not pay for any scalps but those thus taken from enemies killed in arms.

It is unfortunate for the reputation of the general and of his government, that they did not reflect on the futility of such an order and the improbability of its being executed. A certain price was offered for scalps; the savages must know that in a bag of scalps, packed and dried and brought into camp and counted out before the commissary to receive payment, it would be impossible to distinguish the political opinions or the occupation, age or sex of the heads to which they had belonged; it could not be ascertained whether they had been taken from Americans or British, whigs or tories, soldiers killed in arms or killed after they had resigned their arms, militia men or peasants, old or young, male or female.

The event proved the deplorable policy of employing such auxiliaries, especially in such multitudes as were brought together on this occasion. No sooner did hostilities begin between the two armies than these people, who could have no knowledge of the cause nor affection for either party, and whose only object was plunder and pay, began their indiscriminate and ungovernable ravages on both sides. They robbed and murdered peasants, whether royalists or others; men, women, children, straggling and wounded soldiers of both armies. The tragical catastrophe of a young lady of the name of Macrea, whose story is almost literally detailed in the foregoing paragraphs of the text, is well known. It made a great impression on the public mind at the time, both in England and America.

General Carleton, in the preceding campaigns, when the war was carried into Canada, had been applauded for his humanity in the treatment of prisoners. But the part he took in this measure of associating the savages in the operations of the British army was a stain upon his character; and the measure was highly detrimental to the royal cause, on account of the general indignation it excited thro the country.

That no proud privilege from birth can spring,
No right divine nor compact form a king;

Book VII. Line 39.

The assumed right of kings or that supreme authority which one man exercises over a nation, and for which he is not held accountable, has been contended for on various grounds. It has been sometimes called the right of conquest; in which is involved the absolute disposal of the lives and labors of the conquered nation, in favor of the victorious chief and his descendants to perpetuity. Sometimes it is called the divine right; in which case kings are considered as the vicegerents of God.

This notion is very ancient, and it is almost universal among modern nations. Homer is full of it; and from his unaffected recurrence to the same idea every where in his poems, it is evident that in his day it was not called in question. The manner in which the Jews were set at work to constitute their first king proves that they were convinced that, if they must have a king, he must be given them from God and receive that solemn consecration which should establish his authority on the same divine right which was common to other nations from whom they borrowed the principle.

There are some few instances in history wherein this divine right has been set aside; but it has generally been owing rather to the violence of circumstances, which sometimes drive men to act contrary to their prejudices, tho they still retain them, than to any effort of reasoning by which they convinced themselves that this was a prejudice and that no divine right existed in reality. For it does not violate this supposed right to change one king for another or one race of kings for another, tho done in a manner the most unjust and inhuman. In this case the same divine right remains and only changes, with the diadem, from one head to another. And tho this change should happen six times in one day (as in one instance it has done in Algiers by the murder of six successive kings) they would still say it was God who did it all; and the action would only tend to prove to the credulous people, that God was made after their own image, as changeable as themselves.

It is only in the case of Tarquin and a few others (whose overthrow has been followed by a more popular form of government) that it can be said that the principle of the divine right has been disregarded, laid aside and forgotten for any length of time.

The English are perhaps the first and only people that ever overturned this doctrine of the divinity of kings, without changing their form of government. This was brought on by circumstances and took effect in the expulsion of James II. Books were then written to prove that the divine right of kings did not exist; at least, not in the sense in which it had been understood. And these writings completely silenced the old doctrine in England. This indeed was gaining an immense advantage in favor of liberty; tho the effort of reason, to arrive at it, seems to be so small.

But while the English were discarding the old principle they set up a new one; which indeed is not so pernicious because it cannot become so extensive, but which is scarcely more reasonable: it is the right of kings by compact; that is a compact, whether written or understood, by which the representatives of a nation are supposed to bind their constituents and their descendants to be the subjects of a certain prince and of his descendants to perpetuity. This singular doctrine is developed with perspicuity, but ill supported by argument, in Burke's Reflections on the French Revolution.

The principle of the American government denies the right of any representatives to make such a compact, and the right of any prince to carry it into execution if it were made. Whatever varieties or mixtures there may be in the forms of government, there are but two distinct principles on which government is founded. One supposes the source of power to be out of the people and that the governor is not accountable to them for the manner of using it; the other supposes the source of power to be in the people and that the governor is accountable to them for the manner of using it. The latter is our principle. In this sense no right divine nor compact can form a king; that is, a person exercising underived and unreverting power.

West with his own great soul the canvas warms,
Creates, inspires, impassions human forms.

Book VIII. Lines 587.

Benjamin West, president of the Royal Academy in London, was born and educated in Pennsylvania. At the age of twenty-three he went to Italy to perfect his taste in the art to which his genius irresistibly impelled him; in which he was destined to cast a splendor upon the age in which he lives and probably to excel all his cotemporaries, so far at least as we can judge from the present state of their works. After passing two years in that country of models, where canvas and marble seem to contribute their full proportion of the population, he went to London.

Here he soon rendered himself conspicuous for the boldness of his designs, in daring to shake off the trammels of the art so far as to paint modern history in modern dress. He had already staggered the connoisseurs in Italy while he was there, by his picture of The Savage Chief taking leave of his family on going to war. This extraordinary effort of the American pencil on an American subject excited great admiration at Venice. The picture was engraved in that city by Bartolozzi, before either he or West went to England. The artists were surprised to find that the expression of the passions of men did not depend on the robes they wore. And his early works in London, The Death of Wolfe, The Battles of the Boyne, Lahogue, etc. engraved by Woollett and others, not only established his reputation, but produced a revolution in the art. So that modern dress has now become as familiar in fictitious as in real life; it being justly considered essential in painting modern history.

The engraving from his Wolfe has been often copied in France, Italy and Germany; and it may be said that in this picture the revolution in painting really originated. It would now be reckoned as preposterous in an artist to dress modern personages in Grecian or Roman habits, as it was before to give them the garb of the age and country to which they belonged.

The merit of Mr. West was early noticed and encouraged by the king; who took him into pay with a convenient salary, and the title of historical painter to his majesty. In this situation he has decorated the king's palaces, chapels and churches with most of those great pictures from the English history and from the Old and New Testament, which compose so considerable a portion of his works.

The following catalogue of his pictures was furnished me by Mr. West himself in the year 1802. It comprises only his principal productions in historical painting, and only his finished pictures; without mentioning his numerous portraits or his more numerous sketches and drawings.

Besides the two hundred and ninety-nine large finished pictures here mentioned, Mr. West has done about one hundred portraits, and upwards of two hundred drawings with the pen; which last, for sublimity of conception, are among the finest of his works. So that the whole of his pieces amount to above six hundred Some of them are larger in size than any in the national gallery of France; and he has not been assisted by any other painter.

Mr. West is now about sixty-eight years of age. He discovers no abatement in the activity of his genius, nor in the laborious exercise of his talents. He has painted several fine pictures since the above catalogue was made, three of which I have particularly noticed in his painting room: Tobet and Tobias with the fish; Abraham sending away Hagar with her child; Achilles receiving from Thetis the new armour; and we hear that he has lately painted the Death of Nelson. He may yet produce many more original works; tho it is presumed he has already exceeded all other historical painters, except Rubens, in the number and variety of his productions. With regard to the merit of his pictures I cannot pretend to form a judgment that would be of any use in directing that of others. He is doubtless the most classical painter, except Raphael, whose works are known to us.

The critics find fault with the coloring of Mr. West. But in his works, as in those of Raphael, we do not look for coloring. It is dignity of character, fine expression, delicate design, correct drawing and beautiful disposition of drapery which fix the suffrage of the real judge. All which qualities can only spring from an elevated mind.

'Tis to correct their fatal faults of old,
When, caught by tinsel, they forgot the gold.

Book IX. Line 499.

The state of the arts and sciences among the ancients, viewed with reference to the event of universal civilization, was faulty in two respects. First, in their comparative estimation: Second, in their flourishing only in one nation at a time. These circumstances might be favorable to the exertions of individual genius; and they may be assigned both as causes of the universal destruction of the arts and sciences by the Gothic conquest, and as reasons why we should not greatly lament that destruction.

From the political state of mankind in the days of their ancient splendor it was natural that those arts which depend on the imagination, such as Architecture, Statuary, Painting, Eloquence and Poetry, should claim the highest rank in the estimation of a people. In several, perhaps all of these, the ancients remain unrivalled. But these are not the arts which tend the most to the general improvement of society. A man in those days would have rendered more service to the world by ascertaining the true figure and movements of the earth, than by originating a heaven and filling it with all the gods of Homer; and had the expenses of the Egyptian pyramids been employed in furnishing ships of discovery and sending them out of the Mediterranean, the nations called civilized would not have been afterwards overrun by Barbarians.

But the sciences of Geography, Navigation and Commerce, with their consequent improvements in Natural Philosophy and humanity, could not, from the nature of things at that time, become objects of great encouragement or enterprise. Talent was therefore confined to the cultivation of arts more striking to the senses. As these arts were adapted to gratify the vanity of princes, to help to carry on the sacred frauds of priests, to fire the ambition of heroes, or to gain causes in popular assemblies, they were brought to a degree of perfection which prevented their being relished or understood by barbarous neighbors.

The improvements of the world, therefore, whether in literature, sciences or arts, descended with the line of conquest from one nation to another, till the whole were concentred in the Roman empire. Their tendency there was to inspire a contempt for nations less civilized, and to teach the Romans to consider all mankind as the proper objects of their military despotism. These circumstances prepared, thro a course of ages, and finally opened a scene of wretchedness at which the human mind has been taught to shudder. But some such convulsion seemed necessary to reduce the nations to a position capable of commencing regular improvements. And, however novel the sentiment may appear, I will venture to say that, as to the prospect of universal civilization, mankind were in a better situation in the time of Charlemagne than they were in the days of Augustus.

The final destruction of the Roman empire left the nations of Europe in circumstances similar to each other; and their consequent rivalship prevented any disproportionate refinement from appearing in any particular region. The principles of government, firmly rooted in the Feudal System, unsocial and unphilosophical as they were, laid the foundation of that balance of power which discourages the Cesars and Alexanders of modern ages from attempting the conquest of the world.

It seems necessary that the arrangement of events in civilizing the world should be in the following order: first, all parts of it must be considerably peopled; second, the different nations must be known to each other; third, their wants must be increased, in order to inspire a passion for commerce. The first of these objects was not probably accomplished till a late period. The second for three centuries past has been greatly accelerated. The third is a necessary consequence of the two former. The spirit of commerce is happily calculated to open an amicable intercourse between all countries, to soften the horrors of war, to enlarge the field of science and to assimilate the manners, feelings and languages of all nations. This leading principle, in its remoter consequences, will produce advantages in favor of free government, give patriotism the character of philanthropy, induce all men to regard each other as brethren and friends and teach them the benefits of peace and harmony among the nations.

I conceive it no objection to this theory that the progress has hitherto been slow; when we consider the magnitude of the object, the obstructions that were to be removed, and the length of time taken to accomplish it. The future progress will probably be more rapid than the present. Since the invention of printing, the application of the properties of the magnet and the knowledge of the structure of the solar system, it is difficult to conceive of a cause that can produce a new state of barbarism; unless it be some great convulsion in the physical world, so extensive as to change the face of the earth or a considerable part of it. This indeed may have been the case already more than once, since the earth was first peopled with men and antecedent to our histories. But such events have nothing to do with the present argument.

Herschel ascends himself with venturous wain,
And joins and flanks thy planetary train,

Book IX. Line 601.

The planet discovered by Herschel was called by him Georgium Sidus; but in all countries except England it is named Herschel and probably will be so named there after his death and that of the patron to whom his gratitude led him to make this extraordinary dedication.

I would observe that, besides the impropriety of giving it another name than that of the discoverer, it is inconvenient to use a double name or a name composed of two words. Let it be either George or Herschel.

The passage referred to in this note was written before the discovery of the three other planets which are now added to our catalogue. Could my voice have weight in deciding on the names to be given to these new children of the sun, I would call them by the names of their respective discoverers, Piazzi, Olbers and Harding, instead of the senseless and absurd appellations of Ceres, Pallas and Juno. The former method would at least assist us in preserving the history of science; the latter will only tend farther to confuse a very ancient mythology which is already extremely confused, and increase the difficulty of following the faint traces of real knowledge that seems couched under the mass of that mythology; traces which may one day lead to many useful truths in philosophy and morals.

To build on ruin'd realms the shrine of fame
And load his numbers with a tyrant's name.

Book X. Line 261.

A most useful book might be written on this subject. It should be a Review of Poets and Historians, as to the moral and political tendency of their works. It should likewise treat of the importance of the task assigned to these two classes of writers. It might attempt to point out the true object they ought to have in view; perhaps do this with such clearness and energy as to gain the attention of writers as well as readers, and thus serve in some measure as a guide to future historians and poets. At least it would prove a guide to readers; and by teaching them how to judge, and what to praise or blame in the accounts of human actions, whether real or fictitious, the public taste would be reformed by degrees. In this case the recorders of heroic actions, as well as the authors of them, would find it necessary to follow this reform, or they must necessarily fail of obtaining the celebrity to which they all aspire.

I think every person who will give himself the trouble to form an opinion on the manner in which actions, called heroic, have been recorded, must find it faulty; and must lament, as one of the misfortunes of society, that writers of these two classes almost universally, from Homer down to Gibbon, have led astray the moral sense of man. In this view we may say in general of poets and historians, as we do of their heroes, that they have injured the cause of humanity almost in proportion to the fame they have acquired.

I would not be understood by this observation to mean that such writers have done no good. Even the works of Homer, which have caused more mischief to mankind than those of any other, have likewise been a fruitful source of a certain species of benefits. They elevate the mind of every reader; they have called forth great exertions of genius in poets, artists, philosophers and heroes, thro a long succession of ages. But it remains to be considered what a fruitful source they have likewise been of those false notions of honor and erroneous systems of policy which have governed the actions of men from his day to ours.

If, instead of the Iliad, he had given us a work of equal splendor founded on an opposite principle, whose object should have been to celebrate the useful arts of agriculture and navigation; to build the immortal fame of his heroes and occupy his whole hierarchy of gods, on actions that contribute to the real advancement of society, instead of striking away every foundation on which society ought to be established or can be greatly advanced; mankind, enriched with such a work at that early period, would have given an useful turn to their ambition thro all succeeding ages.

It is not easy to conceive how different the state of nations would have been at this day from what we now find it, had such a bent been given to the pursuits of genius and such glory cast upon actions truly worthy of imitation. I have treated this subject more at large in the third chapter of Advice to the Privileged Orders.

But it will be asked how this kind of censure can attach to the writers of history, whose business is to invent nothing, to confine themselves to the simple narration of facts and relate the actions of men, not as they should be, but as they are. This is indeed a part of the duty of the historian; but it is not his whole duty. His narrative should be clear and simple; but he should likewise develop the political and moral tendency of the transactions he details.

In reviewing actions or doctrines which favor despotism, injustice, false morals or political errors, he should not suffer them to pass without an open and well supported censure. He should show how the authors of such actions might have conducted themselves and succeeded in gaining the celebrity which they sought, by doing good instead of harm to the age and country where they acquired their fame.

The history of human actions, in a political view, has generally been the history of human errors. The writers who have given it to us do not appear to have been sensible of this. How then are young readers to be sensible of it? Their minds are still to be formed; and those who are destined for public life must in a great measure take their bias from the study of history. But history in general, to answer the purpose of sound instruction to the future guides of nations, must be rewritten. For example: among the hundred historians who have treated of what is called the Roman Republic I know not one who has told us this important fact, that Rome never had a Republic. The same may be said of Athens, and of several other turbulent associations of men in former ages. And it is for want of this attention or this knowledge in the writers of their histories, that the republican principle of government is so generally associated, even at this day, with the idea of insurrection, anarchy and the desire of conquest. Whereas it is in fact the want of the republican principle, not the practice of it, which has occasioned all the insurrections, anarchy and desire of conquest, that have disturbed the order of society both in ancient and modern times.

Again: in relating the destruction of Carthage, a measure which the zealous patriots, both before and after, considered so essential to the glory of the Roman state, and which has immortalized so many heroes as the authors and projectors of that destruction, I believe no historian has told us that the disease, decay and downfal of Rome itself were occasioned by that measure and must be dated from that epoch; and that the actions of Regulus and Scipio, the themes of universal applause, were really more injurious to their country than those of Marius and Sylla, the objects (and justly so) of universal detestation.

If these principles had been understood by Polybius and his successors in the brilliant heritage of history and had been properly impressed on the minds of their readers, we should not have heard old Cato's vociferation delenda est Carthago applied to the American states by an orator of the British parliament, as we did during the war; because every member of that parliament must have understood that the prosperity of these states would be highly advantageous to Britain, from the extensive commercial intercourse that the relative situation of the two countries required. Neither should we see at this day the French and English nations seeking to impoverish and extirpate each other; each of them entertaining the erroneous and absurd opinion that its own prosperity is to be increased by the adversity of its neighbor. We should have learned long ago from the plain dictates of reason, instead of having it beat into us some ages hence by costly experience, that the true dignity of a state is in the happiness of its members; and that their happiness is best promoted by the pursuit of industry at home and the free exchange of their productions abroad.

We should have perceived the real and constant interest that every nation has in the prosperity of its neighbors, instead of their destruction. France would have perceived that the wealth of the English would be beneficial to her, by enabling them to receive and pay for more of her produce. England would have seen the same thing with regard to the French; and such would have been the sentiments of other nations reciprocally and universally.

I know I must be called an extravagant theorist if I insinuate that all these good things would have resulted from having history well written and poetry well conceived. No man will doubt however that such would have been the tendency; nor can we deny that the contrary has resulted, at least in some degree, from the manner in which such writings have been composed. And why should we write at all, if not to benefit mankind? The public mind, as well as the individual mind, receives its propensities; it is equally the creature of habit. Nations are educated, like a single child. They only require a longer time and a greater number of teachers.

No. 50.

For that fine apologue, in mystic strain,
Gave like the rest a golden age to man,

Book X. Line 393.

Absurdities in speculative opinion are commonly considered as innocent things; and we are told every day that they are not worth refuting. So far as opinions are sure to rest merely in speculation and cannot in any degree become practical, this is doubtless the proper way of treating them. But there are few opinions of this dormant and indifferent kind, especially among those that become general and classical among the nations.

The activity of such, tho imperceptible, is extensive. They get wrought into our intellectual existence and govern our modes of acting as well as thinking. The interest of society therefore requires that they should be scrutinized, and that such as are erroneous should be exposed, in order to be rejected; when their place may be supplied by truth and reason, which nourish the mind and accelerate the progress of improvement.

Among the absurd notions which early turned the heads of the teachers of mankind and which are so ridiculous as generally to escape our censure, is that of a Golden Age; or the idea that men were more perfect, more moral and more happy in some early stage of their intercourse, before they cultivated the earth and formed great societies.

The author of Don Quixote has played his artillery upon this doctrine to very good effect; he has summoned against it all the force of our contempt by making it the text of one of the gravest discourses of his hero. But my sensibility is such on moral and political errors, as rarely to be satisfied with the weapon of ridicule; tho I know it to be one of the most mortal of intellectual weapons.

The notion that the social state of men cannot meliorate, that they have formerly been better than they now are, and that they are continually growing worse, is pregnant with infinite mischief. I know no doctrine in the whole labyrinth of imposture that has a more immoral tendency. It discourages the efforts of all political virtue; it is a constant and practical apology for oppression, tyranny, despotism, in every shape, in every corner of society, as well as from the throne, the pulpit, the tribunal and the camp. It inculcates the belief that ignorance is better than knowledge; that war and violence are more natural than industry and peace; that deserts and tombs are more glorious than joyful cities and cultivated fields.

One of the most operative means of bringing forward our improvements and of making mankind wiser and better than they are, is to convince them that they are capable of becoming so. Without this conviction they may indeed improve slowly, unsteadily and almost imperceptibly, as they have done within the period in which our histories are able to trace them. But this conviction, impressed on the minds of the chiefs and teachers of nations, and inculcated in their schools, would greatly expedite our advancement in public happiness and virtue. Perhaps it would in a great measure insure the world against any future shocks and retrograde steps, such as heretofore it has often experienced.

POSTSCRIPT.

I AM well aware that some readers will be dissatisfied in certain instances with my orthography. Their judgments are respectable; and as it is not a wanton deviation from ancient usage on my part, the subject may justify a moment's retrospect from this place. Since we have arrived at the end of a work that has given me more pleasure in the composition than it can give me in its reception by the public, they must pardon me if I thus linger awhile in taking leave. It has been a favorite object of amusement as well as labor, which I cannot hope to replace.

Our language is constantly and rapidly improving. The unexampled progress of the sciences and arts for the last thirty years has enriched it with a great number of new words, which are now become as necessary to the writer as his ancient mother tongue. The same progress which leads to further extensions of ideas will still extend the vocabulary; and our neology must and will keep pace with the advancement of our knowledge. Hence will follow a closer definition and more accurate use of words, with a stricter attention to their orthography.

Such innovations ought undoubtedly to be admitted with caution; and they will of course be severely scrutinized by men of letters. A language is public property, in the most extensive sense of the word; and readers as well as writers are its guardians. But they ought to have no objection to improving the estate as it passes thro their hands, by making a liberal tho rigid estimate of what may be offered as meliorations. Some respectable philologists have proposed a total and immediate reform of our orthography and even of our alphabet; but the great body of proprietors in this heritage are of opinion that the attempt would be less advantageous than the slow and certain improvements which are going forward, and which will necessarily continue to attend the active state of our literature.

We have long since laid aside the Latin diphthongs æ and œ in common English words, and in some proper names tho not in all. Uniformity in this respect is desirable and will prevail. Names of that description which occur in this work I have therefore written with the simple vowel, as Cesar, Phenicia, Etna, Medea.

Another class of our words are in a gradual state of reform. They are those Latin nouns ending in or, which having past through France on their way from Rome, changed their o into eu. The Norman English writers restored the Latin o but retained the French u; and tho the latter has been since rejected in most of these words, yet in others it is still retained by many writers. It is quite useless in pronunciation; and propriety as well as analogy requires that the reform should be carried thro. No writer at this day retains the u in actor, author, emperor and the far greater part, perhaps nine tenths, of this class of nouns; why then should it be continued in the few that remain, such as labor, honor? The most accurate authors reject it in all these, and I have followed the example.

I have also respectable authorites in prose as well as poetry for expunging the three last letters in though and through; they being totally disregarded in pronunciation and awkward in appearance. The long sound of o in many words, as go, fro, puts it out of doubt with respect to tho; and its sound of oo, which frequently occurs, as in prove, move, is an equal justification of thro. All the British poets, from Pope downwards, and several eminent prose writers, including Shaftsbury and Staunton, have by their practice supported this orthography.

Some verbs in the past tense, where the usual ending in ed is harsh and uncouth, have long ago changed it for t, as fixt, capt, meant, past, blest. Poetry has extended this innovation to many other verbs which are necessarily uttered with the sound of t, tho in prose they may still retain for a while their ancient ed.. I consider this reform as a valuable improvement in the language, because it brings a numerous class of words to be written as they are spoken; and the proportion of the reformed ones is already so considerable that analogy, or regularity of conjugation, requires us to complete the list. I have not carried this reform much farther than other poets have done before me. Examples might perhaps be found for nearly all the instances in which I have indulged it, such as perisht, astonisht, tho I have not been solicitous to seek them. The correction might well be extended to several remaining verbs of the same class; but it is difficult in this particular case to fix the proper limit.

With regard to the apostrophe, as employed to mark the elision in the past tense of verbs, I have followed the example of the most accurate poets; who use it where the verb in the present tense does not end in e, as furl'd, because the ed would add a syllable and destroy the measure. But where the present tense ends in e, it is retained in the past with the d, as robed, because it does not add a syllable.

The letter k we borrowed from the Greek, and the c from the Latin. The power of each of these letters at the end of a word is precisely the same; and the power of one is the same as that of both. Yet our early writers placed them both at the end of certain words, with the c before the k, as musick, publick; why they did not put the k first, as being the most ancient character, does not appear. Modern authors have rejected the k at the end of this class of words; and no correct writer will think of replacing such an inconvenient appendage.

The idea of putting a stop to innovation in a living language is absurd, unless we put a stop to thinking. When a language becomes fixt it becomes a dead language. Men must leave it for a living one, in which they can express their ideas with all their changes, extensions and corrections. The duty of the critic in this case is only to keep a steady watch over the innovations that are offered, and require a rigid conformity to the general principles of the idiom. Noah Webster, to whose philological labors our language will be much indebted for its purity and regularity, has pointed out the advantages of a steady course of improvement, and how it ought to be conducted. The Preface to his new Dictionary is an able performance. He might advantageously give it more development, with some correction, and publish it is as a Prospectus to the great work he now has in hand.

The uniform tendency of our language is towards simplicity as well as regularity. With this view the final e, in words where it is quite silent and useless, is dropping off, and will soon disappear. Having long since resigned the place it held in the greater part of these words, as joye, ruine, and more recently in some others, it must finally quit the remainder where it is still found a superfluous letter, as active, decisive, determine.

We may even hazard a prediction that our whole class of adjectives ending in ous will be reformed and brought nearer to their pronunciation by rejecting the o. A similar change may be expected in words ending in ss. These words have already undergone one reform; they were formerly written with a final e, as wildernesse. They have lost the e because it was useless; and as the final s has now become equally useless, it might be dismissed with as little violence to the language. But these two projected innovations have not yet been ventured upon in any degree; and it is not desirable to be the first in so daring an enterprise, when it is not immediately important.
